JOURNEY

FROM

LONDON TO GENOA,

THROUGH

ENGLAND, PORTUGAL, SPAIN, and FRANCE.

By JOSEPH BARETTI.

Secretary for Foreign Correspondence to the Royal Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture.

THE THIRD EDITION.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOL. III.

LONDON,

Printed for T. DAVIES, in Ruffel-Street, Covent-Garden; and L. DAVIS, in Holborn.

MDCCLXX.

UOURNEY

FROM

LONDON TO GEMONH

noublant

EMGLANI CAL, SPAIN, and cad send cad cad cad

TRY JOSEPH BARETTE

Secretary for Foreign Correspondence to the Royal Academy of Paiguing, Sculpture, and Architecture.

MOUTTED BEFTLOW

IN LOOK COLEMES

VOL. IIL

HE O'N D'O NA

Printed for P. Davies, in Ruffel Street, Conduc-

ADDICLARY.

belief Buri TarBink boldWiki alon

that people,, and that (for inflance) alle

All arm alike: Booksellers and Printers, Character of the Spanish language: Spanish dictionary. Spanish etymologist. Gongora, Lope de Vega, and Calderon. Autos Sacramentales and Loas. The devil in various plays. The devil turn'd preacher. Augustin Moreto: Nat acts, but days, Unities little minded. Sainéte, Zarzuéla, Entremés, and Mociganga: The parish elerk. Translations of the classics, and books of chivalry. Quevedo, Feyjoo, De L'Isla and his Fray Gerundio. Cafiri's account of Arabic books. Juan and Ulloa. Lapez. Public libraries.

ottag of mort san conce Madrid, Od, 10, 1760.

HE fashionable characterisers of modern nations, a breed that in this century has prodigiously multiplied all over Europe, are unanimously agreed, Vot. III. B that that there is a very great difference between the natural inclinations of this and that people, and that (for infrance) idleness is as much inherent in the Spaniard and the Italian, as the oppointe quality in the Englishman or the Dutchman that a great share of sagacity would have be necessary to discover the fallity of fils affertion, and indeed of all affertions of this kind, were we but willing to make off our own mental idleness, say and our national prejudices, and exert our facilties in the easy discovery of our own perstandard in the discovery of our own perceptions.

Men have no inherent qualities but what are common to the whole species, and, should we grant that those characterisers are right in their assertions, we could not avoid adopting the absurd opinion, that Providence has been so partial, as to impart to one generation (for instance) an innate love of labour, and to another an invincible aversion to it.

ceptability

That this is not the case, lober reason uld tell us, if we would but liten. reason would make us easily comthat human nature has always same throughout the world, he nations into which the world, may temporarily vary from in feveral respects, and be altely active or inactive, brave or cowlearned or ignorant, honest or dif-Sober reason would inform us, that particular virtues and particular vices will at times take possession of this or that tract of land, fway its inhabitants for a while in such a manner as to appear irrefistible; then lose their power by degrees, thift away imperceptibly, and make room for other virtues and other vices, which will raise or fink the people according to the nature of their tendency. This rotation is inceffant, though sometimes quicker and fometimes flower; but. men continue still to be essentially the fame, ftill endowed with the fame fufceptibility B 2 BURRS ceptibility of good and bad qualities? Ith with the fame inclinations, fill with the lame general nature. Does activity vail in one nation? The virtues w are the inseparable concomitants vity, will give superiority to that over others. Does inactivity preferiority will be the confequence were the causes that made this nation alternately great or little, or inglorious alternately. Medes, Aff rians, Perfians, Macedonians, Greeks, Romans, Goths, Turks, and fo forth, were by turns the greatest and the lowest people in the world. Each had a period, during which they were in a manner enfilled to reproach this and that nation with idleness safriv radio to moor saffi

The English, who are at present the most active people that exists, stand of course quite at the head of mankind. How long they will enjoy the post of honour, no body can possibly tell. But every body can tell, that they must connieds attended

tinua

sinue to exert themselves with unremitted vigous if they will avoid retrogradation, as was the case with the French and Spaniards, who have in their turn been very active, not many centuries ago, and he privilege of pseheminence by a on of that activity which animated during a certain period. Let the h remit of their present vigour, and they will infallibly be lowered with a rapidity equal to that by which they have been raifed. They will infallibly fee fome -rival nation lifted up to their prejudice. and entitle the fashionable characterisers of the next generations to brand their unborn progeny with that same note of idleness, which they have at present some right to bestow upon other nations, the Spanish in particular.

But let us suppose for argument's fake, the English stripped of their present superiority over all the present nations, which they have undoubtedly obtained by dint of superior activity: let us suppose

B 3

their

their influence not extending much begramman and property of their influence not extending much begramman and property of their native land, as it is in a great yound their native land, as it is in a great
yound their native land, as it is in a great
the cale with the Spaniards;
bell of the cale with the Spaniards;
can any body be feriously of opinion that the nature of the English would alter in fuch a cale, and their present characteristics undergo any real change?
They would intrinsically be less coungeries than they are at present? Less liberal?
Less apt to cultivate all sciences? Less apt to perfect all arts?

Surely no such revolution would happen in their nature. They would virtually be just as they actually are, though those qualities in them might have sewer subjects to act upon than they have at present. The English would in such a case navigate less, fight less, give less, study less, work less: but this is all we can reasonably think would be the case in such a case.

of humour with those puny philosophers, who are perpetually ringing in our ears, that the Italians are naturally jealous, the French naturally volatile, the Germans trains a risk to specify the Germans that the control of bear to grow walpith when a conceited fellow steps forth, and represents human nature in these false colours? Affertions of this fort ought perpetually to be combated, and every opportunity feized to expofe them as partial, as ridiculous, abfurd, and as generally tending to raile the contempt and antipathy of one part of mankind against the other, which ought to be no body's business but the devil's. It is the devil's business to spread fuch erroneous notions, that men may not confider themselves as brothers, but contemn and hate each other. Men not influenced by the fuggestions of the devil, have long told us, that mankind are nothing elfe but a great family; and he is no great friend to that family who contributes his mite towards keeping it in discord and in enmity with partial and false representations. Tho are perpetuagy unging in,

that will be at once, that I am far from having adopted the far spread notion, that the Spaniards are naturally idle. If they do less than the English, the Dutch, or any other present nation, it is for no other reason than that they have less to do. Put them in a condition to be more active, and more active they will be. I judge of this by what passes actually under my eyes. I go to see them in their shops and other places where any work is going on, and I find that they do what they have to do with becoming chearful ness and speed.

I visited this morning a large printing office in the Calle de las Carretas: a street so called, and chiefly inhabited by Printers and Booksellers. The briskness of above fifty workmen employed in that printing-office, was a plain proof to me, that when the Spaniards are put to it, they can be as active as other people. I asked two fellows at one press, how many

knet

fheets

thees they could work off in a day was answered five and twenty hundred, which I thought a pretty good number, especially as they were none of the most mufcular men. Were readers fo numerous throughout this country as they are in England and France, the Spanish printers would work as much as those of France and England; and by a parity of reason, the Spanish workmen in all other branches of manufacture would do as their manufacturers of books. What comes then of the affertions in disfavour of this nation, fo much infilted on by shallow and malignant characterifers, who are perpetually mistaking effects for causes, and painting one part of mankind as intrinfically different from the other?

Having looked into feveral of the many booksellers shops that are in that street de las Carretas and in some other, I had teason to be assonished at the vast quantity of books the Spaniards have written in their language. Before I came here,

I knew

Denew that they have in it a great deal of disinity, different and poetry yet I had Markely dany idea of their Mack of literatime: di From the many titles of books this have passed in review under my eyes force hentered the kingdom, Lhave now. gor a notion that we have too much neglected an adquaintance with the known Redge collected by the scholars of this country. Of the learning of France me are releably informed in our capital sin thes nor are we perfect Arangers to that of Englanderas we have translated a pretty confiderable mumber of English books. But we have framefully overlooked the books of Spaint of late at least, and know almost nothing of what they have been doing for these two hundred years, though our language bears a much greater affinity to its language, than either to that of France of England, breading all of une abathe Spanish language with regard to its found, feems to me even more harmomous than ours, It is at least full as fufceptible deputite of mulic as ours, which is mor he diewith those of England and France Like that of Tufelany it has forme foft gatterality, which renders it quite enchanting to my car. You may then cally imagine, that being spoken by a King and a court much more confiderable than any in Italy, it is of course much more post lithed than ours, perhaps more abundant alfo in words and phrases. It is uncommon in Italy to hear people fpeak Tufean with exactness and elegance, even in Tuf-Kany Iffelf. But here every man and wee man one degree above the vulgar, make Rea point, as in England and France, to express themselves with the greatest propriety. Many of their late writers have Azuve to surpass their predecessors in this point, but is that the case with us? No. A great number of ours feem to have emuloufly endeavoured who fhould fur-Pals the other in forging barbarous words and barbarous phraseology and bound sai ad Tus than ours. It is at least full as fufceptible

The Dictionary that contains this congue, is full as voluminous as that of Della Crusca, and was compiled by the members of an academy of Bolles Lettres inflituted here by Philip V, and called La Real Academia Española:

This dictionary is in fix quarto volumes, of about feven hundred pages bach, printed in 1726.

tory letter to that King, a cuyas reales expensas (says the title) fe haze esta obra,

Befides the dedication, that first votame contains a preface, a history of the academy, a discourse on the origin of the Spanish language, another on Spanish etymologies, and a third on the Spanish orthography, together with a list of the authors, out of which the academicians compiled their great work.

cally down in that lift, and divided into written

The

The first class contains the authors who wrote before the year 1200. But I ought to say author and not authors; as under that class only one book is quoted, which bears the little of Fuero Juzgo. This book originally written in Latin, long before the Arabs conquered Spain, and translated into Spanish in the eleventh containt, as several learned Spaniards protein, is here looked upon as the fountain-head of the Spanish laws, and the chief ground work of their political institutions like the Magna Charta of the English,

The second class has but three books written in the thirteenth century.

The authors of the third class, from the year 1300 to 1400, are numerous enough, and still more the following from 1400 to 1500, and so downwards.

The Spanish Tongue has been cultivated as early as the Tuscan, and their books written in the sourceath century, differ but very little, with regard to words and phrases, from those that are written

bysitten as present, which is the easewith us; and the Spaniards, like us, have

It is a very difficult thing to find the Spanish dictionary compleat. The academicians, it feems, gave away a great number of copies of the first volume as foon as printed, by way of compliment to all the conspicuous men in the nation, on the supposition that whoever had the first gratic would not hefitate to buy up the rest as they went on publishing: but they were mistaken, and a great many copies of the following five volumes remained upon the academicians hands thus imperfect; so that, one may easily have these five for five doubleons, which make about four pounds English; but a complete copy fells for treble the money have a great number of books, that treat professedly of their language. Amongst the will ways

Histo encelhed dre Bernardo Murere, and Principio de la Lengua Castellana o Romance que oy se usa en España, Sc. Printed en Madrid 1674. You know that the Spaniards call their tongue by any of these names: Lengua Española, Lengua Castellana, Romance Castellano, or simply Romance, without the addition either of the word Castellano or Español; so that, a man who speaks Spanish is an hombre que habla el Romance." We call like-wise our language by three names: Lingua Toscana, and Lingua Volgare.

The work of Aldrete (a thin folio) is likewise as rare as the first volume of the Spanish dictionary, if not more. I paid dearer for it than I ought, considering that I am a traveller not over burthened with money, but could not result the temptation, as I find that it abounds in that kind of learning for which I have al-

language of Spain as far back as the Ross mans, through the various changes it has undergone under the different nations that successively invaded and possessed this country. His work is full of crudition, as you may well think that such a plan required; and a good deal of rare, knowledge is to be picked out of it.

Of Covarruvias's book I have seen two editions, both in folio, and both in two volumes; the first edition printed in 1673, the second in 1674 by the same printer, Melchor Sanchez, en Madrid. The second is the best. It is intitled Tesoro de la Lengua Castellana o Española, augamented by Remigio Noydens.

This Teforo is a kind of etymological dictionary. Several thousand of Spanish words, derived from the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Cantabrian, Gothick, Arabick, and other languages, are amply explained and illustrated in it. Few nations can boast

boalt of fuch ctymologists as Covarravias

Besides the dictionary, the Spanish academicians have also published a small octave, intitled (a) Ortographia de la Lengua Castellana. Should any of you ever want to know Spanish more than to-lerably, I have here pointed out the chief works that are indispensably necessary towards such an acquisition.

Was it in my power to stay here but a twelvementh, I would certainly endeavour to do what has not yet been done by any of our countrymen, and give Italy an insight into the knowledge that this nation has been accumulating these several centuries. At present such an undertaking is quite beyond my abilities. I have had Spanish enough these many years for common converse, and can even seel many of its elegancies and pretti-

A GARAGE TO SEE SECTION OF THE PARTY OF THE

⁽a) The best edition is the third, printed at Madrid 1763. 'Tis an 8vo. of about 260 pages, most eleyantly printed.

neffes, but never could apply to it with any great degree of vigour, never having been possessed of any considerable number of books at any time. Don Quicard, some lyrick poetry by Bosem and Gordilloss, some plays of Calderon and Da Vega, the histories of De Solie, Sandoval, and Herrero, half a dozen Books of Chivaley, with Luzarillo de Tormes, the poem of the Araucana and the Translation of Orlando Furioso, make near the whole of my Spanish reading. What can I do with such a stender stock towards an undertaking so great, as that of giving a competent idea of the Spanish learning it.

However, I will not pass such a subject in perfect silence, but communicate to you what little I have now in my power.

The poetical language of Spain feems to me to differ still more from its profe, than even the language of Italy. Some of the Spanish poets I find so very difficult, that I am stopp'd somewhere or other

olum,

when I read the works of Géngora, a fatyrical lyrick, ridiculed by Le Sage in his famous romance of Gil Blas, but much aftermed by this nation. To make myfelf an absolute master of Géngora's language, would certainly require of me some months of close application, though I can read Boscán and Garcillasso with as much case as I do Petrarch and Bembo, whose lyrick verses these two Spaniards seem to have endeavoured to imitate.

I need not tell you, that this nation has produced a great number of dramatic poets. The two that proved most voluminous are Lope de Vega Cárpio, and Calderán de Barca.

Lope de Vega, they say, has lest in print more than three hundred dramatick pieces, out of twice (a) as many that he had written. Another imagination so fertile in plots and characters, has never existed; and of Calderón I have in my possession ten quarto-volumes, which contain near a hundred and thirty plays, besides six other such volumes of his Autos Sacramentales, which are a kind of religious tragedies, or comedies, or tragicomedies. Of such Autos he wrote very near a hundred, and there is a printed list of another hundred plays more, which are attributed to him, though not included in the collection of his works, published after his death by one of his intimate friends.

19430

C 2 existed;

⁽a) Some fay fo many, that I dare not name the number for fear of being called foolifhly credulous.

To enter into a criticism of these two poets' dramas, besides that it would prove too prolix, is beyond my strength. To sit in judgment upon the theatrical performances of a foreign nation, requires much more knowledge of its language, manners, and customs, than comes to my share with regard to the Spaniards. I can only say in general, that no nation, but the Spanish and Portuguese, would bear the representation of an Auto Sacramental.

mental, of which there are many in this language, bendes those of Calderon.

The affociation of facred and prophane made in this fort of compositions, is not calculated for any people, but the Portuguese and the Spanish: In all the Autos that I have as yet read, I find, amongst other oddities, men and women brought in with allegorical creatures, with fabulous deities, with prophets and saints, with angels and devils, with the blessed virgin, and even with our Saviour himselfmins and saints and saints and saints.

For a specimen of an Auto, I will only give you the names of the Dramatis Performe introduced in one of them, written by Calderón, and entitled: A Dios Portazion de estado, "To God for a reason of suffate."

Wir, a gentleman, storm dount

THOUGHT, a madman. Stage come

I The HEATHEN RELIGION, an ugly lady,

The SYNAGOGUE, a filthy woman.

bhatheism, a monfrous man. 2 sit sud

A Line the represent & O of an Auto Sacramental.

St. Paul the apostle duad ba der auf BAPTISM, a fine boy. WHOSOIIH Confession, a woman, Maley Hall PRIESTHOOD, a man. IN TRUITA V.

MATRIMONY, a man. ar Mail hould

NATURAL LAW, a woman.

WRITTEN LAW, a woman.

LAW of GRACE, a lady. ognios stock

THREE WOMEN finging. Janil shiow

What would you fay to fuch characters, were they exhibited upon our flage, even on the supposition that they were ever fo confistent? 200 ont of

The Autos are generally preceded by a Loa, which is formetimes a play by itfelf, and fometimes only an introduction to a play. The Dramatis Persona belonging to the Loa that goes before the above-named Auto, are no less extraordi-Here they are.

FAITH, a lady.

RENOWN, a lady.

The Power of REASONING, a gentleman, THEOLOGY, a lady,

JURIS-

Date ac boat Aso

JURISPRUDENCE, a ledy

PHILOSOPHY, a lady of the Tree Tige!

PHYSICK, a lady and more works to an

NATURE, a ledy a grown 19 and Musicians of either fex.

You will possibly wonder at the many female actors introduced by Gulderon in these compositions. But besides that the words Faith, Renown, Theology, Jurisprudence, &c. are of the feminine gender in the Spanish tongue, you must also know that in Calderon's days it was not permitted to the men to act upon the stage; fo that men's characters were then acted by women: and it is but of late years, that the Spaniards have obtained this permission, I cannot tell whether by the government or the inquisition. See the whims of nations! In England about a century ago no women were allowed to act; and this has been during many ages past, and is still, the practice in the Pope's capital and in Portugal.

C 4

Be-

Befides the facred which frequently procede the Autor Sacrament aless the Spaniards have other Loas that are not facted loonfifting of one or two acts, of These are recited on folemn festivals, especially on the birth-days and wedding days of their Kings, Queens, and other great personages. In one of Calderon's, that was exhibited in honour of Charles II, amongst the interlocutors I find three birds; that is, the phanix, the eagle, and the peacock, together with the twelve months, and the twelve figns of the Zodiec. I will now give you leave to laugh at the French, who make not only rivers dance, but rofes, tulips, and other flowers.

There are likewise many Loas which are exhibited in the houses of the nobility by their servants upon temporary stages erected for the purpose, especially when the masters happen to marry at their country-seats. A kind lord in these domestic Loas is sure to be compared to Junestic Loas piter Mars, or Neptune; as Juno, Vehus, Minerva, Diana, and every possible goddess are most unmercifully brought to kneel before his new bride, or even his mother.

The low people here, they say, are much in love with spiritual Loas and Autos, because they offer a great deal of the atrical pageantry to their eyes. But the best fort are much against this kind of bentertainments, which is a sign that criticism is making its way in this kingdom, if I conjecture right. I am even assured that the King intends (a) to forbid their representation, as the principal clergy have not ceased to make remonstrances to him against such dramas ever since he came to the throne.

As to the other plays of Lope de Vega and Calderón, many are the things in them that a critick might easily find fault with. They both disgust me often long after the date of this letter.

with the prolixity of their speeches, with their superfluous descriptions, with a medly of tragical and comical ideas, with their frequency of far-fetched conceits, with their bombast and sustian interlarded with puns and quibbles, and above all with their frequent associations of real and ideal personages, a mediations of real and ideal personages.

In spight however of their numerous pildities, incongruities, and abfurdities, I must own that I cannot easily lay down their books when I have once begun to read, and am fo far an admiter of their two poets, as to rank them both in the very first class of poetical geniuses. The copionines and originality of their invention, their artfulness in entangling and difentangling their plots, their vaft vafiety of characters, their numberless fentiments, the force and elegance of their expression, their facility of versification, and several other of their excellencies, fill me often with such an enthusialm, as to make me cross rapidly over the ocean of their errors, and foget the frigid dies tates of fober reafon. Indeed the prefent race of play-wrights in France and England, the drieft and coldeft that ever any theatrical age produced, instead of neglecting or contemning the dramatic compolitions of Spain, would not do amis to read many of them, especially those of De Vega and Calderon, not to imitate them at all, but to warm and fecundate their own cold and barren imaginations I must not omit to inform you, that the devil in a large number of Spanish plays, bears a very conspicuous part, and is generally the protagonist of those in which he is introduced. But wherever he makes the principal figure, I always find fome angel, faint, or holy man brought in to counteract his schemes, defeat his purposes, and make him subfervient to the cause of virtue and reli-of this people, than any detail I could give

In the Diable Predicador, "The Devil
"turn'd Preacher," the action is introduced by a long speech of his devilship riding on a fiery dragon. In that speech he vents his rage against the Franciscan friars, who are continually robbing him of numbers, that would otherwise encrease the populousness of his fiery regions. He has just got intelligence, that those friars are come to settle at Lucca;
and Lucca is a town in which he has long reigned in peace, thanks to the numberless vices of the inhabitants, who are now going to be converted, much to his prejudice and dishonour.

To hinder the friars from settling in that town, the Devil orders his servant Associates to redouble his usual diligence, and endeavour their expulsion before they get any firm sooting, by steeling the hearts of the Lucchese in so effectual a manner, that they may never be induced to pity the hardships of the holy intruders, and relieve their wants with the least alms.

The combined efforts of cunning Afmodeus and his terrible master are so powerful, that the governor of Lucca becomes a most inveterate enemy to the Franciscans, and the inhabitants instead of giving them loaves, lose no opportunity of throwing stones at them. The persecution proves so perverse, that the pious designs of the friars are on the point of being frustrated, as they find themselves in the most imminent danger of starving.

But the Nino Jesus cannot bear with any patience the double iniquity of men and devils: therefore comes down from heaven in his own person, along with the Archangel Michael; and, after a short dialogue, orders him to go and bid the wicked Principe de las tinieblas, "Prince" of darkness," to assume the figure himself of a Franciscan friar, and preach so efficaciously to the Lucchese, that they endy foon repent their long errors; and return upon their abandoned wood! that though apparently metan news do sbest The order brought by Michael the devil cannot disobey. Henofrets and florms, Iwears and curies, and emits fire out at the mouth and noticils; but fit! he must fubmit, mangre his pride and wickedness. He turns Franciscany dis chofen fuperior to the little community, and enters upon his mission with a fince-Tity and fervour that he cannot help swall But befides the corrupted morals of the Lucchefe, he finds the morals of his new companions themselves greatly wanting emendation. Hypocrify and luft, gluttony and idleness, pride and avarice, are in full possession of the greatest part of the little community; and these he must take upon himfelf to reform as well as those of the townsmen. and antiobnoo One of the worst friars in the convent-

One of the worst friars in the convent is Fray Antolin, who has just begun an intrigue with an amorous devotee. The Hover-footed Father (a) Guardian what not lost any of his infernal privileges, though apparently metamorphofed, He All has the power of knowing the most inward thoughts of men a and the prefervation of this power enables him to detest all the fehemes of the wicked friar Antolin just las they are going to have their effect. Antolin gives a rendezvous to his doxy; but the devil comes across and disturbs their meeting. Antolin embezzles some part of the alms given him for the whole community, but the devil brings him to an account for it. Antolin gets to a lonely place, in order to regale himfelf with victuals on a fasting-day; but the devil lays hold of him just as he is going to flice the ham and uncork the bottle, forces him to empty his fleeves of all the dainties concealed in them, and condemns him to fast the harder for it. Thus is Antolin exposed to the audience

⁽a) Father Guardian is the title given by the Franeffcans to the fuperior of a convent. 1200 angundi At cloven.

I cannot but wonder how the Spanish friars can bear this, and feveral other plays, in which they are most unmercifully ridiculed. Yet they laugh themselves at the representation of them; for you must know, that in Spain the friend are allowed to frequent the play-houses, in which there is a particular place that is destined to the ecclesiasticks.

Many are the humorous passages in the Diable Predicador, and many the charact ters in it, that fet off each other, chieffy to the disadvantage of the religious orders, the Franciscan in particular. But a nation used to more correctness in works of wit, could not eafily be brought to relife. this fort of humour, especially so shockingly intermixed with the fentiments of the Nino and the Archangel, who are certainly not personages to be made subfervient to the purpose of diverting an unthinking multitude; nor can any apology be offered for fuch indecent monftruofities. THETTIES

tions of religion with the inclination to merriment in this nation, that this play, as I am told, is always acted to full houses, and always with the greatest applause. As to me, it shocked me several times as I perused it; but I must own that I could not help laughing most immoderately several times likewise.

we must add Agustin Moreto, who holds the third place amongst the Spanish dramatic writers. I know but six and thirty of his plays, printed in three 4to. en Vanlencia 1676. What other works he has published I am not acquainted with. Some of Mareto's plays are still acted; and, by those I have read, I see that (like his two predecessors) he has great beauties intermixed with great defects. The comedy, which he has entitled at Canalatero, is considered as one of the mastern pieces of the Spanish stage, and I read it with pleasure.

Vot. III.

D

I know

I know of no Spanish drama that is divided into five acts. The greatest part of them are confined to three, which they do not call acts, but days; and a Spanish poet is here reckoned a great preferver of the unity of time, if he does but limit his action to the space of three days, a Vet this unity is often neglected, as well as the other two, about which the French make to much noise, as if there was no possibility to divert and instruct an audience from the flage, but by frietly adhering to them. For my part, I am not at all scrupulous upon this head. Does a poet strictly preserve the unities? So much the better. But when I go to a play, I go with a refolution to give mylelf up to the delufion of the scene: and provided the poet make his personages speak well in their respective characters, I do not trouble myfelf much about petry dewistions from the three unities. Let a plet be ingenious, the course of nature observed, the fentiments just, the wit and humour humour new, the elocation correct: and a poet may be fute he shall not humber me almongst his censurers upon the account of any rule fet down by the Grand Cornelle. 4 18219 a brond have so and end Every comedy is by the poets of this country generally intitled Comedia famofa, or la gran Comedia. In any other country, people would find fault with him who praffed his own work with fuch epithets; but here they make no more of them, than if they were articles. The Comedia may be damned on the first representation, yet it is constantly a Comedia famosa. of The Spaniards have several other dramatie compositions, besides their Autos, Loas, Tragedies, Comedies, and Tragicomedies. They have the Sainte, Which is a kind of farce in one Act, or Jornada, to a day? It admits of music, and is often fung throughout as well as the Zarzuela, which is a kind of pecite piece in two acts or two days. The audits days off cd. the fent studies juff, the wit and 2230

was married [amache] whice's daugh-

Entremés and the Mociganga, which generally confit of one, two, or three scenes at most, the interlocutors seldom more than four, two men and two moments. The greater the hustoonry, the most perfect the Entremés and the Mociganga. I will abuse your patience so much, as to give you the substance of an Entremés entitled the Parish Clarks, which I sound very diverting, in spight of its most unique parallel'd absurdity.

wife. What, fays he, what are you about, hussey? We have been marked ried three months, and you have not yet brought me a son. Do you imagine that I will suffer you to be so idle? By Saint Anthony, I will have you do as well as your neighbours, or I'll Arangle you. Look at the barber next door. He had as handsome a boy as were was seen, the very first week he was married; and the Justice's daughter was brought a bed of another even before the wedding. There is feared a woman in the whole country, that was not a mother as soon as she was a wife; and why should you be behind them? Hark you, hussey, My partience is out at It am going to market to be back against dinner. If you do mothing me a boy against my coming thome, I will certainly break your subones."

Maria ...

S.T

This speech the poor wife attempts so veral times, to interrupt, and struggles to show him how he owes it to her honesty that he has not yet had his wish; but the clown is furious, and listens to no reason. He will have a boy directly, or will break her bones. He goes off storming at her impudence in being singular, and will chastise her for her laziness if the has not a boy on his coming from market.

Beld "

odenouve the vary P. 3 and of Save Enters

Bilder Purific Clerk white and whole wife Howard had to the marker leys she dome. # What eils your man, that he is run The firmer a both Westellish baller to the noise and thought he was going to best you. What all the fally fellow?" She acquaints them both with her hull band's folly. What much I do, mergh-6 bours? Pray give me your advice, and thelp me but of this scrape if you can. He will certainly beat the if The not ces have been understood, "lylqmos ive is well a root to early managed, Trays tes the other woman! We have hothing to do, but to palm a child upon limit and How can we contrive this, my good en atighted for the aniliared ledding in win We must swaddle up our Parishbrockettere, and lay him down in the the crattle printer tell your hulband, what is he is the boy you made in compliance wwith the injunctions." Is the section ence This will do to a wonder, lays the wife. My hulband is fo horrible a Pray " blockSologe beed, that he will credit it. What soler you war Clerk ? Will you be my

The fellow will not submit to be wrapp'd up, of Pray, Mr. Clerk, he so kind!" If I won't indeed."—" Indeed you must, or I shall be heaten most unmercifully. Pray, take pity on a poor woman!"

After a short altercation the Clerk submits upon a hint, that some of his glances have been understood, and that he shall be rewarded to his heart's desire if he personates the child. Such an offer he has not the power to resist, is swaddled up to the chin by the two women, and placed in the cradle.

Enters Husband returned from market, and lays down a bunch of onions he has bought for dinner.

and ave why, huffey, what have you done?

"baye you is based at the said and the sa sxxvi Pray, man, do not wake the poor baby. You have a child, and here he mis ends this I stook (south heighng blues Bless my eyes, this is a monttrous we big child oThe cradle cannot hold net him. What is this ?his Mind me, hufband. You were fo bes much in earnest, and frightened me ole fo much, that fear made me make him " against the common rules. Then you elf faid often, that the clerk is the hand-- # domet man in the parith, and I took erst into my head to make your boy as vill handfome as he. Are you fatisfied? -It Why don't you thank me? As foon as " he gets up, he shall do your work as well as you. Perhaps better. What 19 do you fay, man?" boyder I fay, that thou art my best wife. lose He looks indeed every bit as well as -setthe Clerk. I never faw any thing liker Let us unswaddle him. as viol dare fay he can stand upon two, and ate fing a fong with us. Huzza! I have 660 bdy as fine as the Clerk, Huzza,

Thus ends this Entremes with finging and dancing, as all Entremes do. I could not help abridging this odd piece of low buffoonry, and am much mistaken if it does not make you smile. The Mociganga, is only an Entremes more loaded with music and dancing than the simple Entremes.

build add in favour of these two kinds of compositions, that often they both exhibit very lively pictures of the manners of the lower people in Spain, especially of the inhabitants of small towns, villages, and farm-houses.

position in prose. At least I have never feen any. The verse chiefly employed both in tragedy and comedy, consists of eight syllables, sometimes rhymed, sometimes not. But with regard to versification, they seem not to confine themselves availables.

colvery Arich sules a as they often have whole leenes in other metres, notien sid ha What offed fuch medley of verses may produce from the mouth of an lactor, I compot sell, The death of the Queen, as d, has deprived me of the light of a anish drama. In the perusal that medy does not prove delightful to my car; and I should think also, that verses of sight fyllables must render the dialogue rether too flow by the necessity of frequent paufes, in But thefer poets know better without doubt, and have long felt which is the measure that must predomit nate in their dramas. Nations are never wrong upon this points and I take it for granted, that cultom would foon reconsile me to these metres, which I cannot as yet relift, Coffee and tea did not tafte very pleasant the first time. I did not like once the English decasyllables, nor the French Alexandrines. But custom has cured me of my distaste misqui natio The infant Don Luis, brother to his Majefty,

e Bewate the Reangers who know that this nation, an well as the Italian has many good granilations of the Greek and Latin clafficks, and that the greatest par of those translations were made by order of Philip III who by the generality of the modern Europeans is only confidered as a political King, and not as a learned King as he was; or at least to far a lover of learning, as no lay tout confiderable fums on have the clafficks in his native tongue But fo few of those translations have been reprinted, that they ere now become very scarce; and those among the Spanish granders, who have the whole collection of them in their libraries are nor a little proud of their treasure, 210578 out will possibly surprize you to hear, that it is also very difficult to collect all the works of Lope de Vega, though the most popular poet amongst the Spaniards, and though many parts of them were often reprinted. I am credibly informed that the infant Don Luis, brother to his Majesty, Majelly, has charged several of the King's ministers, residing the foreign countries, to buy up any of the first editions of de Viga's works, that come in their way. Yet he has not yet been able to form a whole set, though ten years are elapsed since his royal highness thought of it. There is nobody (they say) that has an entire set, but the Duke of Medina Sidonia, who has the reputation here of being endowed with a greater share of learning, than any other of the nobles.

Twrite down what I know on the fubject of Spanish literature, as it comes into my head. Being but little, it is not worth the while to think of throwing it into method; and I rely upon your indulgence for the want of it. I thought before I came to Madrid, that it would have been easy to make a collection of the Spanish books of chivalry, of which we have near seventy translated into very good Italian, and all printed in the fixteenth century. But I find that to make fuch a collection would prove full as difficult, as to put together all De Lega's works, or the Spanish translations of the classicks. The Spaniards quickly buy up any book of chivalry that comes in their way; and happy is he, who can show the largest number. I am told, that the counters of Oropesa has a perfect collection of them at her castle in the village of that name, which was mentioned in one of my former letters.

As for plays, especially tragi-comedies, the Spaniards have several thousands. Some pretend near seven; which to me appears incredible, though I am persuaded that they have more than we, who can reckon about four thousand, good and bad. I am also told, that out of their seven thousand, they have above three hundred which are standing plays. I mean that are actually exhibited in the two theatres of this metropolis. Neither the Erench nor the English can count so many, as their audiences can scarcely bear the representation of a shundred out of their national flockers Howevery Inmust fay likewife, that as far as my judgment can go, the French and English audiences are much meer than the Spanish. If there are many foenes in a play, that will make them laugh, the Spaniards will eafily put up with it pand they will laugh at things, that would put a French or an English Audience out of humourm belbbem off abiThis however is a subject, on which I cannot fay much as what idead have of the Spanish audience, parifes merely from conjectures formed on the perufal of their most popular dramas. A Spanish poet must absolutely exhibit some burlefque character, even in the most bloody tragedy, if he will have a chance of fucceeding; and to have the fentiments and paffions of kings and heroes intermingled with the wit and humour of inferior personages, is an affemblage, that would not be born upon the stages of England and Prance: benwoner flom ed calkie You to You know the name of Quevelor whole gilions of dreams are translated into tralian as well as in all the other polite languages of Europe. Little more than shole vilians is known out of Spain, sof the works of this writer, but ham pole felied of five thick quartos, by which I find, that he attempted greater things chan works of mere wit and humour He meddled much with history politicked and divinity , and the Spaniards rank him amongst their greatest poets. His biographer informs us, that he was a man of family, well verfed in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Arabic, possessing besides several of the modern languages, His chief excellence however, feems to have confifted in wit and humour, and his Life of the Gran Tacano is a picture of the wicked and lowest vulgar, scarcely to be match'd in any language. Tacane means a low cheat, a cunning low fellow to Amongst the modern writers of Spain. the most renowned is a Benedictine Monk called You called Father Feyjoo. I have feen an edition of his works in eight volumes 4000 He is ftill living and ftill writing; but he have not read enough of those volumes, to venture upon his character as an au-By what I have curforily feen, I cannot fay he would be looked upon on the other fide the Pireneans with the great veneration that is paid him in Spain. Nevertheless, it is a rule with me, nt that a man universally esteemed by his countrymen during several years, as it is us the case with him, must be endowed with ad uncommon powers, be his weaknesses and 191 faults ever fo numerous. The Spanish in minute Critics have attack'd him feverally: and I take it for granted, that fometimes I they were in the right. It is so easy and matter to be sometimes right, when hunt! ing for faults and weakneffes even in the best writers! Yet Feyjoo's general powers have flood the malignant virulence of all Spanish Reviewers, whose wife remarks have been forgotten as foon as read; just as it happens in England, where minute critics are no less plentiful than oysters and muscles.

MOT

Next to Feyjoo the Spaniards rank Father Sarmiento, Father Flores, and Father Buriel, the first a Benedictine like Feyjoo, the second an Augustine, and the third a Jesuit. One would almost think that the learning of Spain, like that of all Europe in the dark ages, is here confined to cloysters. I have not yet had an opportunity of reading any of the things that have been published by these three writers; nor indeed of any other living Spaniard except the HISTORIA del famoso Predicador Fray Gerundio, written by De Lista, another Jesuit, of which I will give you a short sketch.

This book, of which only the first volume is published, is a 4to. of about four hundred pages, prolegomena included. It was printed in this town only two years ago.

Vot. III.

E

The

brown of si show sint to this is the short of the ball of the short of ther De Lifta, (who has not prefixed his name to his book) gives us the life and character of Gerundio, a man born of very mean parents, and most aboutly educated.

Gerundio's parents are abundantly tehdowed with the numerous prejudices that authors have throughout Spain. Amongst bother of their qualifications, they are amon Aupidly friar ridden; fo that ano finall part of their income is lavithed in acts of hospitality to friars of all lorders, who are always sure of a meal and as bed whenever they go through Campazas, an obscure village where they reside.

Many therefore are the friers that Gerundio becomes acquainted with before Vindereaches the years of adolescenced and recape a series of his release a He cannot escape a fevere of his rules.

tions be picks up from feveral of them, which notions are all faithfully deposited in the treasure of his tenacious memory.

Being yet a child, poor Gerundio is sent to learn his letters of a country schoolmatter whole took of ignorance and prebfumption is confiderable enough. To vgive but an inflance, out of manys of this School mafter's character, anyour must -known that he shee looked into many fydemonstrathography abut having great Appedionsisq cache he has flouck out one of his bway in which amongst the chief orules that he preferibes and inculcates to nhis pupils, in the most strenuous manner, cone is I that the names of finall things must beligin in writing with a minufcular letter, mand the names of great things with a majufcular. Thus a moufe (for inflance) is to be written with a fmall m, and a Mounor soin with a great one. Wee to the hoy brithe bappens to err against this or any ynother of his rules! He cannot escape a E 2 fevere whipped, because the more absurd the precept, the better he remembers it.

Very lively are the colours with which Father De Lista paints successively the various characters of poor Gerundio's teachers, and of the several blockheads from whom he gradually imbibes ridiculous notions.

From school to school, Gerundio rises to the highest pinacle of extravagance in thinking. From vicious orthography and vicious pronunciation, he is disted up to puns and quibbles; then ascends to anagrams and acrosticks; then mounts up to quaint conceits and Leonine verses; and so higher and higher every day. Nor is he yet sixteen when we see him so hardened in error as to leave no surther hopes for reformation. His mind is become so perfectly dark by this time, in which he turns friar, that the strongest arguments against his notions of eloquence, urged in the plainest manner by two or three learned and sensible amongst his superiors, not only prove inessectual, but increase his perverseness; and he pushes on in his career with the most undaunted tranquillity, despising every day more and more all that is natural and of easy attainment, for ever puzzling his poor brains to discover new avenues to disticult bombast and far-fetch'd non-sense.

Such are the chief outlines of Fray Gerundio, a preacher of the first magnitude. De Lista has not failed to give us specimens of his first sermons, with a view, as I said, of reforming the Spanish pulpit, and making the bad preachers of his country ashamed of themselves. He published his book in this town, decorated with a good number of approbations obtained from several of the most learned and respectable people in Spain, to whom he communicated it, while yet in manuscript. The inquisitors themselves.

felves encouraged him to this (a) publication, and bore reltimony in writing to the laudableness of his work, which they were of opinion would in a good measure bring about the wish d-for reformation. La Historia del famoso Predicador Fray Gerundio (says Father Alonfo Cano, one of the revisors for the inquitition) es uno de aquellos felices pensamientos que sugrere por ultimo recurso el apuro o el despecho en trances apretados, al ver frustrados los medio " The history of the mas directos y propios. preacher Gerundio is one of those lucky expedients that indignation or hard necessity fuggests when the best means have proved ineffectual." And a few lines further:

(a) Mr. Clark fays, that this Pather subbit be calle a Dactor) but been persecuted and selected by the Inquisitors," upon the account of Frey Gerundia. But the suct is as I represent it here. The Inquisition, far from condemning the book, approved of it, and the approbation is printed at the bead of test Buen Me. Glark is always so angry at the Inquisition! He must run it down by all manner of means, and I have no objection to his zeal when it is supported by truth.

Tempoco se desentendera al observar algo cargada la doss de sales causticas y orrosivas de que no se curan con agua rosada las gangrenas. Nor are we to find fault if the dose of caustic and corrosive salts is some-

" cured with rose-water."

Notwithstanding the approbation of the inquisition, and of several of the most learned amongst the Spanish clergy, some Orders, especially the Dominicans and Mendicants rose up against this book as soon as it was printed. They represented to the King (and indeed with very good reason,) that the respect due to the ministers of the gospel, would be too much diminished by such a piece of merciless criticism, and all religious orders rendered ridiculous in the eyes of the vulgar; the consequence of which would be a relaxation, if not a subversion of the religion of the country.

by the friars with the greatest vehemence,

E 4

and

and supported also by several bishops; obliged the council of Castile to take the book into their most serious consideration, which produced a suppression and prohibition of it, rather for the sake of peace than from any other motive.

It is therefore very difficult at present to get a copy of it, as a great number of them were destroyed in consequence of the council's order. Yet I have had the good luck to procure one, and have ale ready perused it with the greatest pleasure. As to language and style, few nations, in my humble opinion, have any thing finer than Fray Gerundio, and the present age has not produced a more humorous performance. Indeed I think the Spaniards quite right, who put it upon a par in many respects with the celebrated work of Cervantes. The Fray would have proved as destructive to the Spanish books of fermons, as the Don was to those of Father De Lista had a knight-errantry. fecond volume ready, but the prohibition of the first put a stop to the publication of the second, which now runs in manufeript, and is said to be quite equal to the first.

In one respect, however, this modern Cervantes is inferior to the old. He has stuffed some of his chapters with too much declamation against a Portuguese book that was not worth a long confutation, and with some episodical criticisms on foreign learning, in which he talks with too much presumption and perempa toriness of what he was but indifferently qualified to talk of. These two errors, not only expose his ignorance in foreign learning, and ridiculous parade of erudition, but unfeasonably interrupt the story, with which he ought to have gone on without ever stopping, had he even been fully qualified for those criticisms. But, as far as I can fee, this is the general defect of the Spanish writers both ancient and modern. They must show away, and interlard every performance with much much learning, shough that to remote years labour published abaidth and work - Only the word more about this book of Fray Gerundio. The manners of the Spamith friam and Spanish sulgar are defetibe Arabice ab auctoribu acidatimbe co of ai ba

Let me naw give you fome account of snother work of a quite different caft from that of Father De Litte, brige orten

You know that at the Escurial there is a valt library, in which, among it thous fands of valuable manufcripts in various languages, there is a large number of Ambic, of which the learned world has belt paper anticops in tol barhiw good to Several attempts have been made at different times to gratify that with; becalways in vain, until King Ferdinand, who was predecessor to his present Majesty, commanded Doctor Michael (a) Cafiri to affume this undertaking, Too and to affum

This Cafiri, a Syro-Maronite by birth, (a) Mr. Clark calls him Syri.

wother Efcurial, thus at last after many years labour published a volume (tombe followed by feveral more) intitled Brazi-OTHEGA! ARABICO-HISPANA BECURTAL LENSIS, five librorum omnium MSS. quos Arabice ab auctoribus magnam parcem Arabo-Hispanis compositos Bibliotheca cumbii Bfcurialenfis completitur. Recenfis et explanatio opera et fludio MICHAELIS CASTRE Syro-Maronita, Prefbyteri, S. Theologia Dodoris, GenTonus Prior visidel flav a auThis book just come out of the pres In this town, is a folio of about 350 pal ges, printed with the best types on the best paper; and the manuscripts noted down in it, amount to the number (w) of 1628, arranged under twelve heads ways on valin, where Ring-Ferdinan Bi falls

⁽a) They amount to 1630, though the last is marked 1628. Mere chance has made me observe, that the class of the Portici begins by mistake with the number 168, when it ought to be marked 270 as the I preending this of the Rhutories ends with the number 269, by another mistake marked 259.

Grammatici, la leveral initammarae Rhetoricki indicate in the introduction of the Poeticiles you was a long to do not

Philologici et Mifcellanei.

acLexicographi. A. Alan To grang grant Philosophi.

Ethici et Politici.

Medicial to sections and the survey Ad Historiam Naturalem pertinentes Theologici. Township and subdering the Dogmatici, Scholastici, Morales, &c. -Christiani) and and the sevel dia Toid

Many and very curious are the notices that Gafiri gives us in his Bibliotheca, which he could never have compiled. were he not a most stupendous master of the oriental tongues, and full-fraught with the most extensive erudition. But I am writing a letter and not a volume; therefore I pass over a multitude of those notices, and will only ikim over a few.

of In the division entitled MEDICI there are feveral Arabic versions from the Greek of HIPPOCRATES, GALEN, and Gram

Droscorides, with several commentaries by the Arabic interpreters, besides a number of original works by several Arabic physicians, amongst which RASIS, who was a native of Persia; Avicenna, the son of a Persian, but born at Bokhara in Arabia; BAITA'R, a native of Malaga in Spain; and MAIMONIDES, of Jewish extraction, born at Cordova.

Still under this division, Dr. Casiri gives us (in his own Latin from the Arabic) the lives of the above seven personages, besides those of Plato and Aristotle, part of whose works as it appears by his Bibliotheca, the Arabians had severally translated, as well as those of Hippocrates, Galen, and Dioscorides.

In the division entitled Ad HISTO2
RIAM NATURALEM pertinentes, under the account of the codex that has the number CMI, we have a catalogue of those Arabic authors who wrote on husbandry.

Will a tuent same soongill do AThe

OU OF WITE Solven wallistic safeers suppose parter of the state care of the contract of the care of th Virtocial the Alcorange and with the source moment with my fate state of more with more Only cleven codeses from the dividen that is incitled CHRISTIAN L. The second of them is a confutation of the dirende, written both in Arabic and Latin, By a Roman Frianchand the daft is is Orannatica Toilinguis onthat sison of she Arabic Performund Turkiff tongton with a version in Latin in every copposite of the fublime poets Zohoir, Abulel. Met--m But the division that took most of my ettention, is that which is entitled P.Q.E. TICI. The manufocipes numbered under this division amount to the number of troog hundred and twenty one of owbich Thirty-one are intolio, one hundred and five Vin quarto and the remaining eighty fine did betavor Yet you are noteto chipk, that the whole division contains nothing atbur poets. Cefirishan brought sunder it diodit; si verba, hand parum ingeniosa. Ceterium.

both the writers of poetry and the writers upon postey are specially critics; and gommentators. Haem very angry this very moment with my fate, that did not direct me to the fludy of the Arabic language, that I might go to the Elevisis to read those two hundred and twenty one votomeshor anderstand at least the short specimens out of them, which the doctor has brought into his book ... How the Roman Arcadians would frare to hear me skippiate, on my return upon the merits of the sublime poets Zohair, Abulol, Makvish Abdelmagid or the immertal com-- Thentators Affaied Khalil Abdella Feddella and a hundred others lat to 1 Several specimens of Arabic poetry Doctor Cafiri has turned into Latin profe . but acknowledging upon a certain occasion, that in his literal version they appear rather childin than otherwise the Badds these words by way of apologyent ti 19 Mec carmina, si sensum specters peraceta diftent; si verba, haud parum ingeniosa. Ceterum, terum, ut in alies contingit linguis. Arabi versus in alteram linguam conversi, non ec gratiam ac dulcedinem servant, quam apud se et domi habent: nec mirum, unus enim quisque sermo quandam elocutionis vim qc legem habet plane ab ea diversum, quæ in ceteris obtinet. In English, thus. learble at the bonds of the

In English, thus.
"These verses with respect to the

" fentiment, are very acute, and the skolw

or pression is ingenious. But it happens

" to Arabian poetry, as to poetry in other or " languages, that it lofes by translation T its native grace and melody: nor is this, a

" to be wondered at, fince every language in

" has its own peculiar phraseology and w

" force of expression different from those og

of other tongues." in both side of grignol received.

To this remark, which must be obr or vious to any one who knows but two languages well, Cafiri adds a digression of histown, which he intitles Arabica Passes on Specimen et Pretium. Who of two min saion immercon The poet it will adds Caller

Vot: III

In this digretion we are told, that the Arabs cultivated poetry with the greatest ardour: that the great people amongst them, were most liberal to their great poets: that early in the morning of fome stated days, the poets of Fez used to afsemble at the house of the governor to recite verses in praise of Mahomet to a vast concourse of people; and that he, whose verses were most applauded, received a hundred golden ducats, a rich robe, a fine horse, and a pretty maiden. The reft of the poets had but fifty ducats a piece: that in more remote ages, great skill in poetry intitled to nobility: that when any poet endowed with uncommon powers came to a town, the women belonging to this and that tribe, would go to meet him with timbrels and other mufical instruments in their hands, as they did when going to a nuptial feaft; would treat him with a fumptuous dinner, and point him out to children as a pattern for imitation. The poet Alaeldin (adds Cafiri) Vol. III. received received once five thouland golden ducats (nummi aurei) from Malek Aldhaer Bibar king of Egypt, for two diffichs only, which (this I will add my felf) would not in our days fetch five-pence from any monarch living. The distichs I will tranfcribe, that you may have a guese at their worth A nie nating currit de qua suo Moerore ne afficiaris. Quod deus decrevit, illud erit; quodque inevitabili decreta status tum est steet to our view about and a state of the must At inter motum et quietem ex momento res componitur, et negotium hoc facile redfillis personis berim viere benrob bearties, cruisb I fuppose that in the original Arabic; the two diffichs are very fine; yet modern sovereigns know better the value of five thousand ducats than to bestow them upon distichs, be they ever so excellent.

Suffer me now to transcribe some paragraphs out of Cafiri's digreffion on Arabick poetry, as they contain feveral fingularities which feem very curious.

mof tion. The poet where who have

Phenitly excelled occurred

Arabic

Prairies

11 867

received once five thouland golden ducats

ton obsider A work

The company of the character of the company of the character o arum meminibus, at ab lofa their poetry any interrent. Sua tomen ipfi non de- thology , for they hold in funt fabula, corum genio et the utmost abhorrence the religioni accommodata. Sub names as well as the worfillis perfonis beroum vir- ship of heathen deities. tutes entellunt, practicaque They have however fables illorum gefta celebrant: in of their own, adapted to vitia aeriter invehuntur, their own genius and recorruptofque mores proferi- ligion. They extol the burs of que quiden in ge- virtues of heroes and ceners alures magni nominis lebrate their atchieveinter ipfos viri excelluere, ments under feigned per-digredion on Ara-

curious chords and dake famor

which reading a virtle in Arabica Arabica

ather oned contestion within ? either tragetties or come. wo vera foripfering alumb dies not dues any author apud feriptores filentium; inform us, that they have in has tamen noffra Biblio- written fuch poems: we there una, vel altera come- have however in our lidist drabin sufferent of brary one or two comedies currit de qua fuo loco. written in Arabic, of Gracorum fabulat fuis car- which I shall speak elseminibus non mifcent : a de- where. There is not in idololatria, maxime abbor- mixture of Grecian myfonages. They inveigh against vice and savvise wantement noisquiros officier leveral finguand in this species of poetry they have had fome writers who have eminently excelled.

Arabic

[8bbeifga ftructure of finished metre, and as it biArabics eres poefic af in cateris linguis, fuis aftringitur numerorum legiburs alientamen et plane di perforations at mor pasehit, Hing omnia fere pacfeos genera, que Gracis ac Latinis ortibus traduntum, habet et Arabica, pidelicet carmina, elegias, enigrammate, edas, fatyras, the guar one pia fimul colletta Divana id of Academica digentur que quidem título poetarum spera inferibi folens, wound confishing of confonants which are moved (that is: have a vowel annexed to them not quiescent, but conounced:) the third Arabibus placuit poefim Scheer, pilum scilicet, diest to selle gue frutturam Aructura tenforii ex pilis caprinis, chordis et paxillis elaborati comparare ; qua

spropter verfus Bait diestur quali perfecti metri

de upmuisible erufaufle in the control of winders moved

Sideri A

(Physoniae

Arabic poetry therefore, like that in other languages, is confined to gertain laws of metre; but thole of a peculiar kind as will prefently appear. There are to be found in Arabic almost all those kinds of poetry which we have received from the Greeks and the Latins: namely, idulliums andegies, epigrams, odes, latires, as all which taken together, pals under the general title of Riven that is to fay, Academica. with which title the writings of their poets are quielcens inscribed

The Arabians call their poetry (that is, the metrical part of it) by the word Scheer; that is, bair (or bair-skin,) and compare its structure to the structure of a tent made of goats-hair (or goats-skin) and compacted with chords and stakes; for which reason a verse is called Bait (a bouse,) as being

Verfus

running a said [ov 80being a ftructure of fnished metre, and as it Were, " " complext build-

Magn It brevibus conflat, fifts of long and more (912 the pides, quorum primus form four feet, the first of chords levis dicher, du- which is called the light plici fittaba praditus, longa chord, being made up of A bride, hot, al Arabes two fyllables, one long lequantio, litera confonante the other fort ; or, as mots a quielcente : 12- the Arabians expres it, a candas chorda gravis, cu- conformant moved, and a fus utraque confonans mota confonant quiefcent the of the parties parties conjunc- feconid foor is called the tus appellatur, cujus due beavy (or grave) therd, priores confonantes funt confifting of confonants mote, altima vere quie- which are moved (that is, feens, quartus palus dif- have a vowel annexed to junctus, in que litera them not quiescent, but pronounced:) the third foot is called the conjoined flake (proceeding fmooth-(yellowers the word of it by the word having its two hrit confonants moved, and its Jaft quiefcent: the fourth foot is called the disjoined ftake, in which a quiefcent letter stands between two others, each of which is

moved

Arabic poetry therefore, in cateris linguis, juis ghi like that in other lan--13 All Arabicus Balaba - 130 All Arabic verte bont quiescens inter utramque motam intercedit. an I poetry (that is, the metri-Scheer; that is, bair (or bair-fein.) and compare its structure to the structure of a tent made of goats-hair (or goats-fkin) compacted with chords and stakes: for which reason a verse is called Bait (a house,) as being

3/60/183

Ex bujufmedi pedibus versus partes componuntur, alternation fibi mutuo fuccedentious chordis et panillis, ex quorum diversa copulatione varia carminum gene ra existant. Metricam autem quantitatem, seu men-Suram Arabes hifce wecabu-Mostafelon, qua ter chorda levis est: Mo- which denotes a combi-TAFAILON, quæ quidem nation of two feet only, chordam gravem, chord- joined flake, the other a am levem, et palum con- light chord: MOTAFAIjunctum defignat: MOTA- LON, which denotes three FAILATON, quo tres pedes feet; a grave chord, a light denstantur, feilicet palus chord, and a conjoined ftake;

con-

numetus chorda era- Morarantaren ced with a vowel.)

Of these feet the parts of their verse are composed, the chords and the stakes following each other alternately from the different combination of which, their potms receive their different denominations, Metrical lis exprimere folent, videli- quantity, or measure, the Arabians denote by the voce tres pedes denotantur, following technical terms. nempe chorda levis, palus Most Afflon, which dedisjunctas, et iterum chor- notes a feries of three levis: FAELATON, feet; namely, a light there. quo nomine tres quoque pe- a disjointed flake, and again exprimuntur, Scilicet a light cherd: FALLATON. chorda levis, palus con- by which they understand junctus, et chorda levis : likewife three feet ; first. FAULON, ubi nempe due a light chord, secondly a pedes occurrent, quorum conjoined Stakes and laftly. prior palus conjunctus, al- a light chord. FAULON. tres pedes, nempe the first of which is a con-Moconjunctus, chorda gravis, a chorda levis, it their verie, are comofed, the repords and he hakes following each

Arabicoruni ergo ver futon dimenfio et quantitas non nift in terto, at alterno confonantium mobilium et quiefcentium memero confirm qui daplex eft, Metricus et Rhythinicus. Prior alternis Conftat pedibus, "pofterior, præter pedum numerum, fyllabis fimiliter definentibus in fine fingulorum verfieum gauder. Hic in cerdam alternas, at mept grammats, odis, 82.de cidit : perpetuus diquando eft ; fed in folo carmine quod plures quam feptem continet per fus teet only,

Singuli versus duobus constant hemistichiis, quæ simul suinta stichon, seu integrum versum consiciunt.

MOTAFAILATON, by which are understood three feet in a series; namely, a conjoined stake, a grave chord, and a light chord.

The meniuration therefore, and quantity of the Arabic verse, consists in nothing but in the deterand alternate number of moveable and quiefcent confonants : This is twofold, Metrical and Rhythmical. The former confifts of alternate feet only; the latter, befides its regular number of feet, requires that each verse terminate in syllables of the fame found (that is in rhyme.) This is sometimes alternate, as in epigrams, odes, &c. and fometimes fucceffive : but only in fuch poems as confift of more than feven verles.

Each verse consists of two hemisticks, which taken together make up one intire verse. Either of diodegrationed and administration ministration of the diodegration of a door or ministration of the diodegration of a door or ministration of the control of the limit of the control of t doid Priorem bemiftichii para The former part of the 10) tem eggeffum seegant, per hemilticky sthey real the shaderierem vere propolition (a) accele (or approach;) ods new ultimandendem fylla- the latter the proposition; on ben posterioris chemistichii, the last syllable has the Antere reddit confinileme definuplattery demistickiallighich esyignor hievibus, feu quanitiens ten long syllables and orderin motis & decem four short ones, or of -rul quechan sidus trapiane divide in sent soute marione fur-Aumprized at their taking sheir melaphore from abjetts about gridle which they remained of frequently memory and implying -nishibeness what Mitton calls the building of wester The by birding the college Acted to the bentantes advocation, and Colius in bis Mrabie Lecticon Anterior pars Bectoris. to whitentholias of the may very well therefore figures the tine The street of the deter the solution of the solution of the street 21911 Propositio is more offcurely expressed. The original is the detwell from a word Agnifying to offer or pretent any ora Wignibroops, doing fated by Golius palus tentorii. -sb this palus tentorii was the vestibule or threshold of the tent, first presenting itself befone you entered the insi elouis bross of a proposition with the instance of the interior part, bence I conceive it took its name, and afterterior part, bence I conceive it took its name, and afterwaras became a technical term in metre. But the minimum one continuous months only the word propositio conveys no such idea, as far as I can see,

F 4

Hemi-

be

the filmen pullationem gives the myine the call (guillocid refreshing attaller ed a dier ornellegeboth -whowite charling polifer alle Whom the different orand filts agistion bear and sinfofile aniby westernesseeta--ota guindecimi carrier am general chords wand fates trife no dedicunturiques as quinque fifteen whinder of verfes. no pisiedis, feu strutis conti- which are comprised in pentur. , rook grible five periods or circles, the first first of the ping, quite profes of the on the rue palment of trial is affiled warrous to (; dans minum genera completti- variegered) comprehends not may wideliber longum; exall three kinds of verfest the on ben debenere ont eged surplinder the interior the fillabioidemetangis; siqua expandito which confift goviguor brevibus, feu quation of ten long syllables and ordecim motis & decem four fhort ones, or of -m) quickentibus conflant : whi fourteen moved and ten flum it sight in this supplied at the bound of the bound guipheinfordi genera inter for be observed, that these -diffingrin sandguidem ob there kinds are diffinof muserem, vel minorem file guilhed from each other, sino labarum quantitatem, fed not on account of the ed, folimob quiefcentes et mo- greater or less quantity of brow tas literat, que alium et their (yllables, but merely allum in carmine obtinent on account of the letters yna gradym. To offer of priefent, any ora glanibrosoa, doldw med by Golius palus tentorii. car the veltibule or threshold of

-ni sat Becundus circulus vocatur Compositus, que continenant duo carminum genera, -nierd propolutio conveys mailuch idea, as far as I can fee,

The fecond circle is ffyled the COMPOSITE,

ranked in different degrees.

falles (perfectumes) com edmento variado of verteso pielamin Communication the perfect and the copies bally wilnessing quite ento Buch that infreen derters testifie drongs or dist diffe that are movies and men poficaris oprioris melifora quiefcent, placed in a dif-MOTAT WALON femies fame ferent order; the meafure tum, fecundi MOFANLAS of the first kind is MO-TON fer puoque vielbus re- TAPAREON Tepested fix bellum was mosked of he times withe measure of the AUNOTRIK KYOMEN THIS WHICH ONE BING OF VEILE many gar stream, aside only belongs, envied the one share sid : hambine cimesan fuecemvel you felle diodecim motis et Borneq ob truelve confonanti chape

Tertion director startes The chiral cheles editop appellatur ; coque fpellant ed similar; to which min corminant general, can- belong three kinds of potilena, factia, let bieve ems, the me (or forge) me carmen, quorum quodiliben fairy, and the dy Hium duodecimeen forantes motas; (or thorter find or poent);" it said hiter quiefcentes. " each of which contains b regard Pendende feweres de white he feet and the property Shalo saucros no son are moved, and eight qui-sob quielection ethiogs greater or left quantity of Laurtus virtulus dition . The fourth circle ism

CONTRACTOS, Wall Squim called the CONTRACTED 1003 pertiner fed Commun fpes under which are cont to zies, mempe carmon velox, prifed fix species of verte pat emiffum, leve, fimile, the quiet, the (a) ejaculadul grot B: The author of the Lines owes this and the fore foing note, as well as the greatest part distinct

(a) The three for A and the last of these fix words toncey in the brightal very nearly the fame idea. They are worlds fignifying the quick, impetuous, and abrupt moiton of an aniconfigurer is gonvultume tory (arisingshami) queram fingula. ex motia : highe, who families the conti duidecin, poppieleentibus cifes and the consulted the more more fundament or the strange of the original sylaws to alliago quielcent, placedure dife-

. Quintempirculin appela . The lifth sirele is call-frimed patrand eight qui-sering bone bevom star tacht ferent erderte che meafure

hinr consentines, and ed the concordant quem unum dumtarat con- which one kind of verte minis general reference contractly belongs, flyled the junctum nomine qued ex conjuined; this is made up duedecim motis et feptent of twelve confonants that quiescentibus contenter; are moved, and seven outoffellower conve polation or startch he les which

Hife quindesim coming To thefe fifteen kinds num generabus jam enument of vertes already enument ratis uddunts palit at deci- rated, others add a fixes munifestum, quid weant teenth, which they calls duorum generum thyth the double rhymed Dhubait, mum Dhubait, ubi fingula in which each hemistick were placed united strong he addition of ord or mal, fuch as a horse leaping, or a stag bounding in the courfe. I think imperuous would be a better translation of emission than ejaculating, and abrupt a bester more than convulled, They relate to the metre and not to the Subject matter of composition. alimi were mortine

N. B. The author of this book owes this and the foregoing note, as well as the greatest part of the English translation of this long puffage, to the learned Mr. Wheeler, professor of poerry as Oxford at a benifithia funt obyebmies : Tends with a rhyme, This dropping of fyllables at the end is called by the rabians Athram, by Huyujmodi pracaptis non the straight of the st rious, enough to define the standard for the standard to the s ricle may confu ia. aut forfus acumen poffulant cujusmodi incentia vel apud lag algebra in a work publish control and at Kome in Latin and and Arabick in the year 1642. inticled. Institutions of the drabick language. In this book Guadagnoli has dationem fyllabar um in cormine Arabes Tarphil, fant, ubi carminis genus ant bisined e dire vo ant auctum pede, cefuram om ni tajum nolkafistom us in molt elegant verte-us mismuras (notelarist at the end of which trea-Lean dolly for made au enlarged by one loot, early dollar to has eat a changes the colma motation residue, vel neglectus changes the colma motation of the series of the colma motation of the colma m is a great object of con tention with the Arabian Perhans are much delighted with.

The Arabick poetry is not to scrupulously observant of these laws, but that their writers may be fometimes at liberty either to add or retrench a fyllable or two: elpecially, when either a weight ty and pithy fentence, of -giog a 19 smanondida us nant and scute lentiment nant and scute lentiment hater that the second state leems to require it: and liberties of this kind often occur both in the Greek and Latin poets of the first repute.

The addition of one or more fyllables in a verse the Arabians call by the word Tarphil, the Greek by the word Profthefis; in this case the verse, when enlarged by one foot, bemistichia funt rhythmlea : This bith a thyme. This or dropping of tyliable at the end is called by th Arabians Athrem, by the Greeks Aphærefis; let this fuffice, concerning the Arabick poetry, as far as relates to my prefen purpole: He who is cu rious enough to defin further information upo this article, may confu (among others who have treated this subject in La tin) Father Philip Guadagnoli in a work publish ed at Rome in Latin and Arabick in the year 1642. intitled Inflitutions of the Arobick language. In this book Guadagnoli rendered into Latin whole lystem of Arabick which Dieldin metre, furnamed Alkhazragæus, by birth a Spaniard, the hrit of poets, has give us in most elegant vers at the end of which trea the we are also presented in the well are also presented in a control of the cont Arabick poetry.

I hope

I hope

I he addition of one or more syllables in a verse the Arabians call by the word sarphil, the Greek by the word Proshess; intakes case the verse, when enlarged by one soot, changes the cosma motachasten into that of motachasten; the abridging

A Lape this long quotation from Caurie work will prove acceptable, as it gives an idea of Arabic profody, which is a thing not eafily got at in books. But is it not furprizing, that a nation fo fond of poetry, as the Arabs feem to have been, and possessed once of large tracts of land in three parts of the world, should never think of having theatrical exhibitions, and neither write tragedies nor comedies What difference between nations carefully collected: (these Epigenorish one

That the Arabs were great lovers of poetry, the manuscripts in the Escurial are undeniable witnestes. In that which is marked with the number CCCLLV, there are two catalogues of poetical writers, of whom little now remains but their names in that manuscript. The first list contains thirty of those names the second one hundred and two : and in the number following there is another catalogue of fifty-nine more. mulains on The

The manufcript marked ACCGLVI. contains a collection of EPIGE AMMATA de prapostera libidine, intitled puerorum descriptiones. The collector was one Bar dereldin, of whom doctor Cafiri Speaks thus, " Homo perditissimus, ex viginti poetis qui de hujusmodi argumento scrip-Sere, curiose nimis collegit, collectaque, in hunc librum congessit. Epigrammata fe obscenitatemomittes, elegantissima dixerisa That is a most profligate man, who the carefully collected (these Epigrams) and formed this book out of swenty poets that wrote upon this Subject. Overlook the obcenity, and you will fay that the epigrama are very elegant.

But it seems that Badereldin and the twenty poets from which he collected the epigrams were not the only wicked writers of their nation. Cafiri under the number CCLXXI, gives this account of Abulol, a native of Syria who died blind in 1057. "Eum ex carminibus ut ingeniosum et acutum poetam, ita quoque "mi-minime religiosum esse apparet quad Christianam religionem, ac Judaicam et Maho metapam sectas impudentissime sapius de rideat." That is: It appears that this ingenious and witty poet was not at all religious, as he often and most impudently derided the Christian religion, as well as the Judaick and Mahometan sects.

The Arabick poets preserved in the Escurial, were not all natives of Spain. Cafiri's title to his book tells you fo. A certain number of them were Afiaticks and Africans, and a few of them born even before the times of Mahomet. When Philip II made his intention known of collecting the Arabick writers, in that library, many people who had Arabick manuscripts in their possession, failed not to pay their court to their fovereign by presenting the library with them. A large number was thus put together; and as the fuccessors of that monarch perfifted long in the fame scheme, many additions were made to the

the library of those books that the Morifes had concealed at the time of their expulsion in feveral parts of the kingdom, from whence they were not allowed to carry them off. In some Spanish and Latin letters of the unfortunate Antonio Pe-(printed at Paris without a date,) on the reverse of p. 93. is mentioned a libro de mano antigua que se attribuye a Salomon, que esta en fan Lorenzo el Real, y el Emperador Carlos truxo con otros del faco de Tunez; that is, " a book written in an old " hand, attributed to Solomon, which is er deposited in the Escurial's library, and " was brought with some other by the Eme peror Charles V from the pillaged town of Tunes." But what contributed most to fill the shelves of the library. was an accident recorded by feveral Spanilh authors, and most particularly by one who wrote the (a) Historia de la preserved in the King's library at Madrid. Casiri has this vot. III.

Vida y Hechos del Rey Don Phelipe Tercero A. HISTORY of the Life and Actions of Philip III. His words are thefe, "Ex " Gohernador Pedro de Lara, corriendo el " mar de Berberia, llegò junto a Sale y " encontrò con dos navios en que iba la re-" camara del Rey Zidan de Marruecos; y " haviendo peleado con ellos, los rindià. " Hallo entre otras cosas preciosas mas de mil cuerpos de libros en Lengua Arabe, de Medicina, philosophia, y buon Gobierno, iluminados y escritos con gran costa " (vilos antes que se llevassen al Escorial;) y el Zidan tuvo esta perdida por la mayor y offreciò al Rey por su rescate grande suma, en cantidad de setenta mil ducados. "La respuesta fue entregasse todos los esclavos Christianos que se hallassen en su reyno, y con essos rescatarian los libros. El moro venía en ello, fi las guerras ciwiles que trahia con un Morabito y con * Ju Sobrino Muley Zeque, dieran lugar à anecdote out of that historian in his preface, which he backs

Rey que el (u) suyo no llegaba hasta comco plir su deseo, mando llevar la libreria al convento Real de San Lorenzo el del convento.

In English, thus.

Governor Pedro de Lara cruising on the Barbary-coast, sailed near Salee, and met with two ships that contained the wardrobe of Zidan king of Morocco. He fought and took them; and found in them, amongst other precious things, more than three thousand Arabic books of Physic, Philosophy and Politics well limned, and fairly written. I saw them before they were taken to the Escurial. Zidan considered this loss as very great, and offered

(a) For the fake of those among st my readers who understand Spanish, I must say, that I have copied this anecdote exactly as it stands in Casiri's Preface; therefore if the last period of it should prove obscure, the fault is not mine. I do not see whether the pronoun suyo relates to intento or to Rey. If to intento the period proves inelegantly dark; and if to Rey, no grammar can be made out of it. Perhaps some word has been dropp'd by the Printer of Casiri's book.

G 2

" to buy them back of the King for seventy thousand ducats. The answer was that he should have them back if be would fet of at liberty all the Christian captives he had The Moor would have in his kingdom. agreed to the condition, had it not been " for the war he was engaged in against a Morabite, and against his own cousin Our Catholic King Muley Xeque. e feeing that his wish was not complied with, ordered that the library should be taken to the Royal Convent of St. Laurence at the them all deflroyed at once "Escurial." odDr. Cafiri, wherever he mentions in

Dr. Cafiri, wherever he mentions in his Biblotheca any of the books that went to the Escurial by means of that capture, takes care to distinguish them from the rest by adding these words to the account of each: Ex Regia Bibliotheca Marochana.

But if an accident enriched the Escurial, another impoverished it, and went near to annihilate it. In the year 1761 a casual fire burned the upper parts of that noble edifice, and greatly injured a stage.

large hall that was entirely filled up with Arabic manuscripts, of which near two thousand perished in the conflagration. It is melancholy to think of the many libraries recorded in history, that have been destroyed by fire. For my part I' am not much pleased with the custom of forming large collections of books and depositing them in one place. Besides that fuch books become generally useless to mankind, there is the danger of feeing them all destroyed at once by a fire: and I am resolved to bequeath my few to the studious children of my friends, in hopes that many may profit by them, which could never be the case, were I to leave them to a fingle person, or what would be worse, to any great library. It is but feldom, as far as I have observed, that those who collect books, or those who inherit large numbers of them, become very learned. Few value the things of which they have abundance, and the G 3 most Jarge most learned men are suppose the whole) those who never possessed a great library Ji It is remarkable that amongst the many poetical compositions of the Arabs collected in the Escurial, there is not one epick poem, nor any mention made by Cafiri of any that over existed. This particularity cannot give us any very high opinion of their invention; As far as I can fee by the many specimens from Cafiri, the Arabs dealt in Centiment more than in imagery; and if this was the ease (which is most probable,) several of the present European nations, as well as the Greeks and Romans, must be deemed upon the whole much more poetical than the Arabs, especially when we consider, that they not only have never written any epick poem, but never had any of the dramatick kind; the one or two found in the Escurial scarcely coming under this denomination, and not being at all theatrical, as appears by what Cafiri tells has just bought a considerabi mant ton (Caffris book is not eafily to be had though quite fresh from the press. Bas sides, that only five hundred copies of it have been printed, the King has already given away the greater part, and sent a copy to every eminent University in Europe. That from which I made this imperfect extract, was only lent me. Had this favour not been done me, I should have been forced to pass it over in silence, to the great impoverishment of this letter.

onnois

Cafiri's

Thave little more to add with regard to the Spanish literature, because I know but little more. The King cannot perhaps be called a violent favourer of it:

Yet he has done something towards its advancement. He has bestowed several favours on Casiri, and given high posts to several men of good parts, such as Mata, Campomanes, and various others, who have made themselves known to His Majesty by means of their writings. He has just bought a considerable piece of ground ground in this neighbourhood which is to be turned into a botanical garden iunder the direction of Don Enazio Bernardes a physician, who (like Father Sarmiento already named) is much skilled in natural history, and has visited several of the Spanish provinces in order to collect plants, that he may enrich the new garden with the productions of Spain, before he thinks of exoticks, as he himself told me.

The King has also given high employments in the navy to Don Georges Juan and Don Antonio de Ulloa, who assisted Messieurs De la Condamine and Bouger in measuring three degrees of the meridian under the Equator. In 1749 Juan and Ulloa jointly published in this town three vols. 4to, entitled Physical and Astronomical observations. I have not seen (a) the book, but the British Consult General, who is a man of great parts that the French translation is far from faithful.

their observations in natural philosophy are news and all very curious; and their account of the Spanish dominions in South America the very best that ever was published.

Amongst the learned of this town there is also Don Thomas Lopez, the King's geographer, who is actually compleating his set of Spanish maps, which, I am told, will prove very accurate. Nor do the Spaniards want writers on husbandry and commerce: They have several who enjoy an extensive reputation on account of their works on these two subjects; but, as I said, I have not time to look into every thing.

The King admits to his royal confidence his Lieutenant-General of the Ordinance Count Gazzola, an Italian nobleman, well versed in various branches of literature, a great engineer, much skilled in the polite arts, and first discoverer of the Ruins of Poestum, which he went in person penion to inspect when he lived at Napida, and had them drawn by (a) Sabatini land engraved by Bartolozzi, at his own expence.

His Majesty is not indifferent to the advancement of the arts, and much countenances his Royal Acadamy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, often arewarding those who distinguish thems felves most in it. He has in his actual fervice, not only many native artifts, but alfo feveral foreigners to whom he gives wery liberal falaries. The most diffinguished amongst these last, are Mengs and Tiepolo already named, both painters of great merit, and Sabatini the architect. Sabatini was pupil to the famous Vanvitelli, whose daughter he has married. He has been ordered to form a plan for the cleanfing of this town, which His

Ma-

⁽a) Count Gazzola delayed so long the publication of those drawings, that a Scotch Architect has at last forestalled them with another set made by bimself and published in England.

Majorty has resolved to beautify with new buildings, of which there are two actually begun, both very large; that is, the custom-house and the post-office.

The King has erected here a chinamanufactory, which is in great forwardness, they say; and grants also great sums of money towards the support of the silk and woollen manufactories at Segovia, Talavera, Guadalaxara, Barcelona, and other places. He has also ordered various reparations of several high roads, and begun two new ones, which will flead to this metropolis from Bilboa in Biscay, and Cadix in Andalusia.

defigns, show him to be a good King; and he would certainly do more, had not his predecessor left him loaded with a heavy debt, which he is resolved to pay off by degrees. But it will be long before his treasury is in good order, as his mother very much exhausted this kingdom in order to make him King of Naples

Naples when there was but little appear

To conclude this prolix letter, there are eight public libraries in this town, besides a good number of private ones; from which I infer, that there are here many men of knowledge; more perhaps than foreigners are aware of, though it be almost a general fashion at present in several parts of Europe for men to tell each other, that the Spaniards are very ignorant.

doms possessed by A T T E T T E LIVIL

Arich town, and why. A long conversation with a lady. Via Crucis. Anos, Estrecho's and Santos. An affecting Separation of friends.

Madrid, Oct. 11, 1760.

IT is not, I think, in the power of men to render this metropolis a trading town, because it lies too far from the season because it has no navigable river near,

vince, that like Estremadura, cannot be made very sertile for want of water. of

Under these disadvantages howevers Madrid is a most opulent town, as you will eafily conceive when you reflect, that it has been for feveral centuries the constant residence of powerful monarchs, and the ordinary abode of almost all the richest nobility and gentry of this king-Gold and filver flow abundantly into Madrid, not only from the provinces around, but from the vaft kingdoms possessed by this crown beyond the Atlantick. Sudden and confiderable additions are also frequently made to its usual wealth by viceroys, governors, and other fervants of the state, who generally come back from Mexico, Peru, and other parts with fuch stores of doubloons, as enable them to pass the remainder of their lives in the most splendid affluence and their posterity to riot in luxury for ing town, because it lies too sags bin tage

fo because it has no navigable river

Of a town to constituted, that painful! labouris in a manneral mont excluded from it, it is not difficult to comprehend, that very many are the inhabitants, who have almost no other business but that of comtriving how to fpend their time agreed ably. From fo fingular a fituation, fing gular customs have necessarily arisen, and because the intercourse between the fexes is the chief mode of pleafare amongst mankind, many are the inventions to which this people have had red course, in order to facilitate that inter-Felix, who thinks this cone or coth saluqu

The defire that men and women have here of paffing their time in each other's company, is fo very eager, that it appears not unlike rage, especially to him who has long lived in England, where men of all ranks feem ashamed in a manner to hang too long about the fair, and where the generality deprive themselves levery day of their company during several hours, merely merely for the take of talking politicks or circulating the bottle made an air model

Many are the methods that both sexes have contrived here in order to spend as much of their time together as it is possible, and this letter will bring you acquainted with some of them.

a visit to a very agreeable lady, whom I have talked the other night at the Terol tulia into some sort of familiar friendship by my narrations of English customs, and accounts of my present journey. Don Felix, who thinks her one of the most reasonable beings in Madrid, has begg'd of her to take some care of me during my stay; and both she and her husband have engaged to render it as pleasant as it shall be in their power.

body to guard it. Up-stairs I went, knocked at the door, and a footman open'd. Is your master within? No, Sir. he is just gone out. Is your mistres?

Year for Please to go that way pointing to an apartment on the left hand.

I did as he bid me, and croffed three large rooms. From the last I heard populate talk in a fourth.

Dona Paula, can I come in ?

Come in, come in, cried the lady, and in I went. I found her fitting in the midd of her hed, leaning against half a dozen pillows, and in a drefs far from ion elegant She had a small table before her covered with a napkin, with a diffiof chocolate upon it, and fome (weet biff cuits upon a filver plate. Half a dozen gentlemen fat round the bed upon foolen and I had the fatisfaction to find that I was not totally amongst strangers, as L had already feen fome of them at the Tertulia and at Don Felix's. She bid me place myself by her, rung for my chocolate, asked the usual civil questions; then the chit-chat went round, which was really mere chit-chat during an hour.

dien and Lore and a fact the About eleven we were defired to with draw in the next room, as the was going to get up. A pretty maid foon came to rat the waited for us at her tollet, where we attended here A female bair-dreffer was bufy about her, and I am told that it was not much the fashion here to have that office performed by men, except amongst the greatest ladies; who have often Frenchmen for it. But I much not omit to fay, that during the hour we were by her bed-fide, fome of the company went fuccessively off, while others fuccessively came in, entering the room with no more ceremony than if they had entered their own houses, only faying Des Gratias or Ave Maria as they raifed the door-curtain.

100

Her toilet was soon over, and a servant came to tell her, that mass was ready. I was going to take my leave, regulating my motions by those of the other visiters; but she bid me stay to take a ride with her after mass, and dine with
Vol. III. H

Her If I was not otherwise sing agodia I bowed, enter'd the Capilla with ther, dipp'd my middle finger in the holy waen ter, touched hers with its kneeled bighter on a cultion, and mais was faid. We were encircled by her maids and fervants, who all had their rolaries in their Hands, and appeared fell as devout as their mittrefs, all whileting pases and leven during the fervice, which lafted not half an hour of the Capilla Tchapely is nety small, but very heat and prettily orned mented and I find, that not only the greatest nobility have here their thapelo at home, but also the richer gentry, and every body that can afford the expense. Those who do not keep a domestick chaplain, have a priest or a friar, who comes to fay male every day for an alms of three or four (a) reals. No lady here miffee hearing mais every day. She would not be du bon ton, if the did, belides that the would be confidered as indevout, though 2.d. (a) A real is about three-pence English money.

helt stellgion does not oblige them to helt it but on holy days.

After the mais the took me in her couch, and we went to take an airing out of St. Bernardin's gate.

As we went along I law many whoden croffes planted on the left fide of the road, shout fully yards diffant from each other, and affect her the meaning of them.

the iduits who often in the afternoon of here to make the Via Crucis fold

The Kid Crueis confists in this. Two conthits jestits walking gravely before the people, stop before every bross successively, and all kneeling devoutly in the dusty say aloud seven paters and seven at each, together with a nightry, that is, a kind of short prayer, the words of which commemorate the several falls out Saviour has had, as he was pushed harbarously up Mount-Calvary by the wicked Jews with his heavy cross upon his shoulders. I think our jestits and other friars practise something of this kind in various parts of Italy, with only this difference, that there they perform the Via Crucis in churches, whereas here they do it also on a public road.

H 2 his

their

But you must not felicitate me on my having been tête-a-tête in a coach with a handsome Spanish lady. One of her lervants out of livery had got into the coach with us; and as I feem'd furprifed at its the told me in French, that such was the fashion in Madrid, and that no femme comme il faut went ever alone with a gentle od man, not even with her own hufband This privileged fervant bears here the title of page. The grandees ladies have more than one; but, instead of riding with their mistresses, they have a coach to themselves which follows that of the mistress. At Naples the great ladies have inherited this pompous practice from the Spaniards, who possessed that kingdom long. Doña Paula's page kept in a corner ud of

prife

101

of her coach as close as he could, that he will be displayed and never failed to cross him a felf as he went by every cross of the Via.

Having gone about two miles, we alighted and came leifurely back to the gate, followed by the coach, the page, and the fervant that had rode behind. The country round us I thought very unpleafant. Scarce an habitation, or even a tree is to be feen as far as the light can extend, which is strange in the neighbourhood of luch a populous town. The whole prospect on that fide looks quite barren and delart-like : but the fun shone mildly, and a breeze fanned theair in the gentleft manner; which as long as the walk lasted suspended the head-ach that has tormented me ever fince I entered at the other gate, as I told you already It was near two when we got back to Dolla Paula's, and dinner was ready; but, before we fit down to it, I must ap-

H 3

prife

181]

price you (as the did me) of tome cultoms on the peculiar to this nation to the nation

the ladies in Madrid had to far adopted the tystem of some Italian districts, as to have Cicilbeo's under the denomination of

Carteja's

I have heard much, said the of your Italian Cicitheo's, and, as far as I can judge, they are the same thing with what we call Cortejo's that is, gentlemen who attend on ladics with some fort of assiduity. But I must tell you that we have so far improved upon your country, man as to divide our male friends into these classes, which we call Alo's, Effrence cho's and Santo's

I well remember, faid I, that by these words I have sometimes been puzzled, especially in reading your comedies, entremetes, and books of wit and humour; but never had an opportunity thoroughly to understand their various meanings. If how

Know then, interrupted the, that on the last day of the year it is the general cultom here for many friends to meet m the evening to draw the Ano's. All the names of the gentlemen and ladies prefent, no matter whether married or unmarried, are written upon bits of paper, and feparately thrown, the gentlemen's in one hat, the ladies in another. Then the youngest person in company draws a gentleman's name with one hand, and a lady's with the other. The two persons thus drawn are to be Ano's (that is, years) during the next twelvemonth. Thus a lady's And acquires a kind of right to be oftener in her company than he would otherwise have been. He enters her houle at any hour; dines with her when he pleases without previous invitation; pays her a regular courtship; and in short becomes in a manner aggregated to her family.

There is no other difference, continued Dona Paula, between the And's and the Estre-

H4

Efrecho's, but that the fish assis halen on the last day of the year, and the Elyan the on the twelfth night on Each Ednes ches name is also drawn together with a Copla or Seguedilla, of which there ato innumerable composed by our wits for this purpose and bought ready printed. These kinds of Epigrams, commonly satyrical, excite often the minth of the comb pany, especially when they chance no quare with the perforal character of him? or her, whose name comes out with the Copla. Estrecho, means a slafe friend. As to the Santo's, they are likewise the same I thing with the Ang's and Effresholes Thoys are drawn on Christmas-eve but insteady of Coplas and Seguedillas, we draw them with the names of Saints, from which it circumstance they have their names to the Saint that comes out with the lady's it name, the gentleman drawn with henis to pay particular devotion during that is year, and fo the lady to that which is a drawn with the gentleman's name.

t fre

19 By there means, continued Dona Pau the ladles make fure of constant visiters, when they go out; and as these drawings of names generally precede a fupper, they always prove very chearful, especially when it happens, as was my own case this year, that the hufband and wife are drawn together I am actually my hufhand's Efrecha and of course have a right to command his attendance upon me till next Epiphanyadaya amen

A should not diflike these fashions, faid I mas I to flay for years in this town, and the foreigners who relide amongst you must certainly find it very convenient, to become thus at once the domeflick friends of three ladies at leaft. de ever your hufbands and fathers take the alarm at their wives and daughters having fo many familiar friends? And are your Correjo's generally as harmless drawn with the gentieman's name.

104

millo answet you in your own language, faid Don's Raule, I must put you in mind of your property, that Tutto il mundo è puefe, th all countries are alike." We have ladies here, who might live better than they do. But this, I suppose, is not quite peculiar to us, and the dominion of vice probably extends much further than the Manuanares. The milconduct however of wicked women, is not to be attributed to the custom if having dho's and Effrecho's. She that is loft to honour, would find means of fatisfying her lawless passions any where. But this I will have the confidence to fay of my townfwomen of the better fort, that the greatest part live as they ought, whatever notions foreigners may form of omi Corcejo's, and whatever liberty they may take withous when they expatiate on the freedom of our manners to We are lively, we love to be gallanted, we could fing and dance for ever, but the point of honour and the influence of religion are 10er our rooms as freely as ourfelves. You may of yet toll vie Madrid. I have read my there of French books, and an informed of the opinions that are forced abroad on our nocoune: Yet let me affire you, that I know the skeys of my own fex, and that the ladies of Madrid proves in gegeral very good wives, mothers, and daughters of more is there any place in Europe where hulbands are more gallant, fathere make affectionate, and friends more respectful. I might make you often an eyenvitacis of what I advance would you but day a few months with us he kou would fee and bear men and women ben have and talk to each other very lovingly; hirt fearge ever find a gentleman têtolatête with any of us. This is no custom vof ours. Confider our method of living. Not only our gates, but every doorsin our apartments is open from offering to higher All our friends and acquaintance come in and go out without afking leave, ound our many fervants are allowed to en-Ver our rooms as freely as ourfelves. You general may may already have observed that this is the general system in Madnidy to that whose amangit our ladies who intend to early on an intrigue, are pacito the hardeft hifts, and must partly alter the aftal h forms of Spanish living, which cannot eafily be done without incuming centure, and without making chamfelveethe talkus of the whole town ... You will fee to day as at dinner one of my mon intimate friends Dolla Bibisha deword , byho has been dullew ingenthefermany oyears motive gularyol vilited and amended upon by one of our dr most accomplished cavaliers royer theris be one of our most respected women, andud not a foul in all Madrid would dare to entertain the least thought to her disalisate us, and believe that out hurbandesgrave

And are your fingle ladies, faid I, vined to ed with the fame familiarity by their bus Anoisi Effection, and Santos tion danced in

Not quite for answered the dady, anguency they are inot kept under that greaters and first books. In nov

thatrie

general

aparaments; to which few men are the aparaments; to which few men are the the matters of which a mutick, and dancing. But they always ding at their parents table, and converte of course with our daily guests with as much freedom as with their brothers; and at night we take them to all Nights and Terridian without any foruple, and let them dance and sing their fall at home as well as at our friends houses during the longest evenings; nor are we alraid to see in them talk to any gentleman, fully persuadic ed that no man would dare to address their mental to see the part of the highest respective one.

that you will dismise your past notions of no us, and believe that our husbands and by fathers are far from being such jealous and tyrannical brutes, as they are painted to in French romances; but as Mode that we you want to take the minutest notice of our manners and customs. I will take the you to Eugnearral some day next week and that you may fee make and more of the hard have facility with attached bridge dealers and the second stands and hard in wand pray, Madam, what is we the you

general

that

It is a village, the replied, about two leagues from town, where gentlemen and ladies refort in parties on fine afterpoons, under the pretence of Merendar; that is, of eating a fallad, and take of a mulcadel-wine, for which the territory of that village is much renowned. We often go there, attended by our Santo's. Ano's, Eftreche's, or any other friend.

is One he bands chule formetimes to be by the party formetimes note. When they come; for much the better. Howevery I militially that ladies never go there but feveral togethers note for much for the lake of decency, as because the more the baltes, the chearfuller the party of There, white the Merendo is making ready, or after after 18 we commonly dance, or fingle on walk shout with the greatest hitarity will Such for nearly fuch, was the account that Dona Raula gave me duting therewo. hours we fpont in our ride and walks de am fore; that you will be formewhat furprifed to find it fquare fo little with those of other travellers; but that I cannot help. She has backed her affertions with fuch proofs, as ought to be quite fatisfactory, belides that I have no just ground to call her veracity in question. Her natural goodness has perhaps made her lean on the tender fide a little more than thuth requires, and descived her into partiality, yet her affertions are in my opinion fuffit ciently verified. Material and and merin you'le was two when we alighted at her gutte of Itwas quite pleased with the company that was to dine with us possibly because they received me with the kinden civility Her husband, Dona Bibiand her faithful friend, and two more gentlemen, feemed to vie in politeness 4 rafter

the friend of Don Felix. The dinner was not fumptuous, as it confided but of four diffies, belides the loup and a noble! defer of fruit and (weetmeats. We fell to it pell-mell, and not in the regular or der that is constantly practifed in England. It is not here much the cultons it forme, to eat in china as they do in England, but in filver. Dona Paulat husband feems a chearful and good tem perdoman of te felicitated me on the progress P have stready made in the fact vournof his Barecha, and shoped this would contribute to alter my refolution of deirting Madrid in halten During dinner they made me launch into the manners of the English nation, and all appeared much pleased, especially with the accounts I gave of the English ladies; which they found to agree with those they often had from Don Felix de de de de We did not fit at table a whole hours but role up as foon as the cloth was removed, and went to a balcony over the III Afrett, Michel struct a where a diffe of coffee was drank as we looked at a procedion, that happened to pass very close to the walls on each fide, to avoid the abominable filthings in the middle of the street.

About four we had our chir char interrupted for a few minutes by the coming injofts middle aged gentleman, who after the usual bows for himself by Dona Paula with a look full of concerns on highest by lyour counterance, said the
with a most affectionate tone of voice, that yether foon to lofe you. All activity in the adiptive at last received the king's ordenished the gentleman, and I must go to morrow, that mediavois bloods I activi-

To morrow histerrupted the lady.
To morrow, faid he again; and kneeled fiddenly by her, threw his arms round her wait, and the her's about his head, which the prefied most tenderly to her boson. Without offering to kis her, as I would have done upon such an occasion, het started up, a embraced her husband with III.

I chia m

Dona Bibiana, shook one of the gentlemen by the hand, beckmed to the other to follow him, and without being able to utter any other word but a Dior, a Dior, walked away with the greatest speed.

The selling of this thort and ludden kend is nothing at all; but the feeling it performed was quite affecting. I was then told that the gentleman is a near relation to Done Paule's hulband; that he has just cheen promoted to a high employment in the kingdom of Leon, and going 20 residentheir probably for feveral years. Jadeser diefe Spaniards have fuch feelings, that I should love them much was deto W Ray here only while. As they were prasing him. Den Felix came to fetch me, wok me to the royal academy of paintings of which It shall give you fome account to morrow, then we went to the house of another of his friends, where we spent the evening chiefly playing at cards, as any neify entertainment would be thought in inc. indeindepent in the present great mourning disonichting cholikdane of Message of alda wheel more Regal Hondens of Painting of fer refused. The provide diferent great King Mariadmalla the famous finger. Women fitting to basific relief to the sail of the sail of Morfet to couringet Harmleffacts of the Pedelell Jubilatios, Caleffin, and come de Medicia the Girland comat' he . boy it . po blish of the walls of and the center of madra there is the . Hat is, whare fourte, alle have in the town, normed by uniof the houses, the fromts of which are fungraported by lofty porticos. I need to Tay the more of it, as you will find it repeatodly described in almost every book of - travels that mentions this metropolis, toto gether with an account of the bull-feafts in that are often exhibited in it. One of the houses in this square, is callid the Royal Academy of Painting, Sculpture,

inde-

Tyracism all shirted each There is the make the professors and students of choice and refort, the first to teach the second to them who can there carry off a promined King Ferdinand production to his perio fent Majelly, and founder of this academy lipsed ho expense so furnith the feveral apartments in it with collection finest statute from Italy John anthe Hern cules of Rarnese the Apolla of Behadres the Venus de Medicis, the Gladiotorio d'ntingue. Faun. Sec. &c. and the walls of if are abundantly decorated with pictures and drawings, as is usual in such places a What his predeceffer began this King endeavours to encrease with confiderable munificence I I am told that he frends very liberally to support it, having always looked upon those arts with a favourable eye, witness what he did towards unbury ming Herculeneum when the was at Mapless Belides paying the usual lindispense fable expendes of the Academy of thehrad living models, lights nattendants, ballen his

no:

Ind Migely pays alto for the maintenance of told young mention to Rome every pear to fludy shole arts Those among it them who can there carry off a premium from the Midden of St. Duke, are generally pendoned for life on them Perun home and thefe of their works which obesince their this advantage, are hung up in the academy with a more michipiton that records the archievement Hall tall? Befides the calls, pictures, and draw ings the Academy is possessed of a choice Horiry chiefly containing fuch books as are wondnowe to the acquisition of those ats i fe that every body, who has a mind toldaddict himself to the cultivation of them; is furnished there with sufficient means, the Rudents being found even in pedelle and paper to draw at the King's cyci minister what bereid cave in boiligies

To what fum the defraying of all this amounts, I could not learn from the academy-keeper, a kind of gentleman who refused a fee I tender'd, for his waiting on medicing the bounds of payouth mening hald texplaining every thin MUNICH precision No School faid he withdrawing his hand handle careful pana na fe ufa el estilo de Maltos de Misade Whot in Spain as you do in Atalyst Alba compliment was far from florening arries Plike hence the Indian than theis penish chiffoth in this particular and would rather have fuch people districted to fales any fed that is offered as by means of la fee I am at likerty to fee a fliow at leifus; whereas when I know shat not frenis so be decepted; I am luath to give the church trouble tolaman, who, sconfelous on his fide that nothing is to be gut by his atfendance do me, may chuse to be out of hehe weys when I want to be the thing. by spire himself the trouble of minute explanations, or grow preville at my. taking too much of his time with and tugor his day I have feen the Kinger and I tomor fay that a prominent notes a pind-Cing eye, and a ferene countenace make ahmi him

biod look much sherter than his coin repreferits him a le have dean deveral pare traits of him, even one by his favourite Mengs : but neither Mengs, nor any other painter, had given me a true idea of his face, which is pleasing, though made up of irregular features and to de Your manage hiAs to his person, it is of a good fize and his walk quite Bourbonian; that is, erect and fleady. He appears to be robuffgand I dam told that he has a great deal of bodily frength. His complexion is quite fun-budnt, which is undoubtedtyrthe confequence of his passion for the phaceau In this respect he is a true Meleager. No degree of heat or cold can keep him from this exercise You may possibly think it worth the while to read an account of the life he leads ; and here It is, as I had it from people who have been daily witnesses of it for many years. I ballvery day in the year he gets up about - dis pand exactly at feven comes out of dis bed room in his night gowp ... He bullabiga finds grids waiting in the anti-chamber a Gen silhembre de Gavare, a Mayondonto desger mana, a physician de furgents, anti deveral other regular attendants, with whom he interchanges words while dreffing. The Gentilhombre, kneeling on one knee, prefents a difh of chocolate, which the King drinks almost gold of He then dimmes fome of them with a nod benters his private chapel, and hears a mass of then retines to a closet, to which no body is everladmitted, and there roads or writes, especially on those days that he does not intend to go a hunting in the morning of - About cleven he comes out of the clos fer to meet the whole royal family. They all kife his hand, or offer to do II, lower ingula knee. The embraces them if all, kiffing the princes at the cheek, and the princelles on the forehead lambian adTi or The royal family withdraw after a little thit chat, and he gives a molnentary audience to his confessor. Then speaks to those ministers of state, who have any business bulinels atquetonimunicate, mit saper que figms Then the family ambaffadors come in y chatis, the French and the Neapolis minero With the mithe King interchanges words for a quarter of an hour; feldon more of Just against the time that he is going to dine, the other ambaffadors and foreign ministers come in a Exactly in twelve he fits down to table quite along now that his queen isdead. The ambaffau dors and foreign ministers, his sown mit nifters of flate, the great officers of his samy, and feveral other great perfonages; pay their court while he falls to cating and all those whom the guards have permitted to get in, croud round the table to fee him dine. The cardinal-patriarch of the Indies fays grace, not as cardinal or patriarch, but as his chief chaplain.

The Mayordoma Mayor stands on the King's right hand, and a captain of his body guards on his left. One of the weekly Mayordoma's, two Gentilhembress

bufiness

he water, then the wine, which i ants attend promifeugully One two Gentilhombres curves, the other give him drinks The diffies, all covered are brought in one by one in an uninterrupted fuccession by pages, and each dish is put into the hands of the carving Gentilhombre, who takes it with one hand, uncovers it with the other, and prefents it to the King. The King gives a nod of approbation or disapprobation at every Those that are approved, the Gentilhombre places upon the table: the reft are carried back. Many however are the diffies approved, which still are not touched as the King eats only of the plainest, and always with a good appetite.

The Gentilhombre who gives him drink, pours first a few drops of wine and water in a silver-salver that has a beak, and drinks that himself; then kneels on one knee, and pours of both to the King,

wine

610 the water then the wine, which is always Burgundy.

When the King has deank his first glass the embaliadors and soreign ministers, who stood the while and all in a row on the King's right hand, make their bows, and go to pay their respects to the respos the royal samily that are all at their dinners, each in his or her own apartment, the prince of Assurias alone, Don Luis alone, the Infanta alone, and the two younger Infantes together. All these tables are sumptuous: yet none so much as that of the queen-mother, of whom I shall speak a word by and by.

Near a hundred dishes are generally served to the King, of which about forty are laid upon the table. When they are removed, an ample desert succeeds: but he seldom tastes of it, except sometimes a little bit of cheese and some fruit. The last thing that is presented is a glass of canary-wine with a sweet biscuit. He breaks the biscuit in two, steeps it in the wine and the fill blit health willes and Harris doug Bris body-guards presain A moment before he rites from table which lasts near an hour, the ambalfadors and foreign ministers return, puls before him, and go into an adjulning room, where they wait for his coming a With them be convertes about half ah hour upon indifferent matters ! offw Sill He then re-enters his private apartl ment to put on his hunting dress; that is a grey frock of course cloth, inadetall Segovis on purpole for him, and a leather waifteout. The leather breeches he also ways puts on when he gets from bed; especially on those days that he intends to go a-hunting. Light boots, a hat flapp'd before, and ftrong leather gloves compleat this drefs. While the boots are putting on, the Sommelier de Corpe (Duke of Losada) gives him a dish of coffee. Between one and two he fleps into his coach drawn by fix or eight males, and away with his brother Den Luis, wine,

ein 1

Half a dozen of his body-guards presede the reach on borin-back and three videsmen jide behind it of at 1886 of the livid w obstacle to this going out on hunting days not even a storm of hail accompanied by thunden and lightning. Done built, who is his constant attendant in the coach is the confiant attendant in the coach is the only person allowed to factor the game on these daily huntings. But longitudes in huntings some of the grandeds who want on him at the character granded the some privilege. How comes back) carrying as much of the feather game in his hands as he can hold. Another quadrupeds he has killed, fuch as diags, deer, wild boars, wolves, foxes, being they are brought to the palace in carts. He furveys the whole, orders it

Luis,

- 160 DE Weighed Shight predicts and the ordinary which he has kineral worker took. of Affords to hund with him bid of or awater the game ar wagita and balled and to the knichen, he goes to pay a more private andience to that hindry white nday it happens to being edition them tras on which day of private addience. Miller Brings Bir papers mig bug, and offers to his impleated that there was not the purpose of his erranded in the arms ners banners welves him the thine, who playe de Rouagno el game ur bares lo elle ed) with three of his courties igencially Diske de Lolada Sommeliere de Companie Ef 19 palish nand is nother grandee whose mane bill have folgouch ad lile never plays for any things having recourse to this expedient merely to confume a quatter of an hour, at the half an hour that he must wait for his fupper. mosì supper at traine the dits down to not catrended only by this courtiers with charges dros bed to get up again theat day tor alse Make Hound of collupations, and with offe fame forupatous niesty of method in the difficultion of them, feldom or never to. itolbe altered, except on post days; wisen intend of going to hunt, he patter some of the time; both morning and and moon, an abe private closes, writing to his ion our Napless so his brother at Parner, vo bilis lifters in Toria and Lifton, and very of the like wife to Marquis Timued and to - The Prince of Santo Whandre the fire of the reflicion feith ebert estief modern e - The Record Crys, or governous, to his Sthis fervente, eyet always their Minerlidy again on postudays the has any timester, It is is is is laboratory i telestis, orantheicompletest turner suffice that they or verifted He is a most expert eurocrafand mworks town ito perfection & The fliop ricontains many turning engines of rare invention, fame of which were prefents Supper. from

-from the King of France etniged by County Gazzola olicady man tioned, one of the greatest machanists of the age. By him his Majeffy is ettended when working in the laboratory of of As to his personal character, the was certainly a good husband when his queen was alive. Never once did he swerve from conjugal fidelity, nor ever had any miftres public or private. His brothers were always his belt friends and most familian companions and as to his children there is no need of faying that he always proved a kind father. He is rather an eafy, than an affectionate mafter, never descending to great familiarity with his fervants, yet always fatisfy'd with what they do. en They fay that he never betrayed any great love to any body out of his own family, no more than hatred. It happened once, that he detected one of his most familiar domestics in a lye, and forbad him his presence, but fill continued him his falary. His conversation tufferablem

tion is generally chearful, but always as t chanteras his bonduct. He repoles muchos confidence muhis chief ministers, especia. cially Marquis Squillace, who has found! the means of prepofferfing him in favour of his own abilities; yet neither Squillace, nor any body elle, was ever a favourite, when by a favourite we mean a man ad-w mitted by a lovereign to the closest intimacy of friendship. No body ever reached to high with him, though he treats fome with particular kindness, especially the Duke of Lofada, who in virtue of his employment fleeps constantly in the same room with him. This Duke of of being the honestest man in Spain, which is probably what has endeared him to the King. As to Squillace, he is a most indefatigable man, and they fay that he alone dispatches more bufines, than all the other ministers put together, fcarcely allowing himfelf time to eat of to fleep. But they charge him with ino Vol. III. fufferable fufferable haughtiness and insatiable averice; two qualities not easily pardoned, especially when they meet in a foreigner, as it is the case with Squillace, who is a Sicilian. But it is not my intention to give you the characters of any body here, only tell you what I hear people frequently repeat with regard to this and that great man at court. It is natural that Squillace should be envied, having reached the highest post, though a stranger; and the language of envy is not to be blindly credited.

The King uses every body with a fort of condescension that may be called civility, which impresses his servants with a strong sense of real respect, independent of his kingship, as the rigidity of his morals gives them no room for the least contempt. His method of spending time, so unalterably regular, may appear somewhat dull: but is certainly laudable, and it is quite necessary that a King should have his ministers and servants vants exactly apprifed of the hours, and even the minutes, that they are to approach him for the dispatch of business in their respective stations and employments.

Every body here agrees, that his majesty is far from wanting knowledge of men or things. He has read much, and never passes a day without looking into a book. Besides his native tongue, he speaks Italian and French with the greatest studies and propriety, nor is he ignorant of the Latin. They say, that he knows his own as well as other princes interest sull as well as any of his ministers, and does not spare any expence to be early informed of whatever passes in Europe and out of Europe that may affect him any way.

would suffer any Italian opera to be perviormed either at Madrid or Aranjuez, as was practifed in the former reign. The days of Queen Barbara are over, when the fame time honswere squandered upon Italian muficians. I have already mentioned the great ascendant Farinelli had obtained over that Queen; nor was her husband Ferdinand less fond of him than herself. Yet our modern Orpheus behaved with fo constant a humility and moderation during the long time he was their favourite, and got to many real friends amongst the natives by his disinterestednefs and fimplicity, that fome of the grandees spoke in his behalf to the King on his arrival from Naples, and were for generous as to recommend him to his favour as a truly honest man, who had never abused the confidence of their former masters, but constantly employed his credit to do all the good that was in his power to do. All this is very well, said the King; yet los capones son buenos sobre la mesa, " capons are only good to eat," and would not hear of his continuing in Spain, but ordered him two thousand doubloons pension and fent him back tohis country, difmiffing at the same time all the opera-fingers, as their falaries amounted to too high a fum in his opinion. This piece of economy won him the hearts of his new subjects, who had long grumbled at the prodigality of their former fovereigns in this respect; and it was long before they gave over their acclamations whenever the King appeared in public. To some body, who after the departure of Farinelli asked him if he ever intended to order an opera for the diversion of the Queen who loved mufick, he sternly replied ni agora, ni nunca, neither now, nor ever." You may well think that after so laconic an answer, no body ever dared to mention Italian operas any more.

his-

Besides retrenching this absurd article of expence, he lessened also that of his stables, in which on his arrival, he had found no less than four hundred compleat fets of coach-mules, and a much larger number of faddle-horfes than was X tent him back to necef-necessary. Both horses and mules he quickly reduced below the half, to the great mortification of the underlings at court, who by the indulgence of his predecessor had long been accustomed to parade about in the King's vehicles, though not entitled to it by the mediocrity of their ranks in the King's service.

By these and other like regulations his majesty soon enabled his exchequer to pay off a part of the vast debts with which he found it encumbered. Those debts are still very considerable; yet, if the peace continues, there are probable hopes that they will be totally discharged in about twenty years.

As to her late majesty, they say that she was a good woman in the very best sense of the word. Fond of her husband, of her children, of her servants, of every body that she thought good. Yet she was quick, and her quickness would sometimes make her reprimand people who did not delerve it; but coming pre fently to herfelf, and fearing to have done wrong, the would enquire better, which conduct generally forced her to make reparation to those she had offended, and bewail that she had much more of the impatience than of the virtue of her dear mother. Repeated declarations of this nature, and the natural warmth of her heart, had endeared her to all that approached her.

the

With regard to the Queen-mother, the famous disciple to stern Alberoni, blindness and age have long quenched her high spirits, and totally disabled her from taking any part in the politics of her fon. Her present way of living is quite unmethodical, never doing any thing at any stated hour. She will sometimes dine at noon, fometimes in the evening, fometimes at midnight, often making day of night, or night of day, contrary to what she used to do in the lifetime of her husband Philip V, whom the would often upbraid for keeping often that her table is more sumptuous than the King's; yet it is but seldom that the touches any of the many dainties served up to her, living almost upon nothing but a large cup of chocolate that she drinks as soon as she gets from bed. The King visits her once a day, puts up with all her fancies, smiles at her unsettled way of living, and treats her with the profoundest respect.

K 4

fhe

On every gala-day, his majesty puts on a new suit, and as rich as art can make it: but all his fine cloaths are constantly made after the fashion that was used in his younger years, and he always appears impatient to undress, being never easy, until he resumes his grey frock and leather waistcoat. He was always an enemy to all fort of innovation, and so steady in uniformity, that he wore for above twenty years a silver-watch. His Queen insisted often upon his changing it for a better, but to no purpose. Yet, to get rid of her importunity, and incessant jokes, resolved at last to have a gold-case to it, which he made himself on the lathe.

tuods

When he resolved to give the king-dom of Naples to his son, every body expected that he would send to Spain all the antique monuments that had been dug out of Herculaneum. But little did they know him that formed such conjectures, as on the same day that he crowned that son, he went to the place where those monuments were deposited, and there left a ring he had worn many years, which had been found in those ruins, saying, that he had now no right to any thing that belonged to another monarch.

The palace of Buen Retiro was formerly but a mean habitation for such kings as those of Spain, if we credit old accounts. But the late king embellished its apartments very much, and his prefent majesty has also laid out some sums about about them, that they are now very grand and convenient. I went by it this afternoon, and faw no less than two hundred women fitting in rows before it upon the bare ground. I asked the meaning of such an extraordinary assembly, and was answered, that they came there upon no other errand but to enjoy the fine weather, and look at the courtiers going and coming. They do so on every fine day, holy-days especially. They all sat with their mantillas turned up; that is, with uncovered faces, which renders the fight agreeable enough. You will eafily guess that those women are not of the highest rank; yet I am told that they are not of the last neither. An odd fort of diverfion, thought I, to fit in rows on the bare ground for feveral hours!

There are neither hackney-chairs, nor backney-coaches in Madrid. A foreigner cannot therefore ride occasionally about town, as both foreigners and natives do in London and Paris. He who keeps no coach coach of his own, must either walk or hire a chariot, which is commonly to be had for thirty reals a-day. All voitures are here drawn by mules, and the coachmen might as well be called postillions, as they ride on the mule instead of sitting on the coach-box: a good practice in my opinion, as by so doing, they obstruct less the sight through the foreglass.

This custom of having mules instead of horses, to wheel-carriages, is here universal, because horses cannot long resist this hot sun in summer, nor the cold blasts in winter, which I am told is very rigid in this town when the snow covers the hills on the side of the Escurial. Some foreign ambassadors who refused to submit to this custom, and would have horses to their coaches, have had reason to repent their love of singularity, as no pair of horses could last them a whole year, whether they made use of Spanish or foreign horses. No body is allowed mules to his vehicle. The king only has fix, and sometimes eight; but he is seldom seen about town. Out of Madrid the great people ride with fix, but sew are permitted to enter the town gates with them. Only the great officers of the crown, and the foreign ministers (if I am not mistaken) have this privilege; but then they must have their postillions in travelling dresses, and go straight home from the gate at which they enter.

There are very few beggars here, and those few do not walk much about, but generally keep by the gates of the most frequented houses, where they do not much importune the comers and goers with eager supplications, extending only their hands with a craving look. If you give any thing, so much the better: if not, there is an end, as few of them ever open their lips,

The best gentry here are very kind to strangers when once introduced to them, if you will allow me to judge by what I experience myfelf: nor do the common people here give us bad language or angry looks, as it is often the case in England, where the lower classes are continually deceived into an aversion to foreigners by a daily uninterrupted fuccession of difhonest and malignant scribblers. As to the Spanish grandees, they are seldom acquainted either with foreigners or nan tives that are not of their own rank. A foreign ambassador was telling me yesterday, that he has not had a dinner in the space of four years residence, but from those grandees who are actually in the ministry, nor ever had any to dine with One must conclude by this, that it him. is not the custom amongst the great, to keep open houses here as they do in almost all the capital towns in Europe. Yet some of these grandees are very rich, nor can they be taxed with avarice, as most of them live with the greatest splendor: but the mode of their spending is different different from that of other countries. and generally confifts in keeping a great court within doors, which confifts of many chaplains, fecretaries, pages, and a large number of livery-fervants, together with a confiderable number of mules in their stables. Then very few are the grandees . or rich people in Madrid, who ever difmifs a fervant that has been a while in their families; but when he is disabled by age or fickness, he is a jubilado, as they call it; and enjoys his falary as long as he lives, without any further care. There are some noblemen here who, as I am told, have above a hundred fuch ufeless domestics between town and country; and you must own that there is no less humanity than grandeur in this fort of Spanish generosity, which extends even to the middling classes. Our great nobility at Rome, Naples, Genoa, and Mi-Jah, continued in the same practice so fate as the beginning of this century; but have been these several years leaving it richly off:

offinnot much to their honour, in my opinion niques or francer wants occasionally to go a few leagues from town, he may hire a calessin; that is, an open chaise drawn by a single horse. The driver runs a foot by the side of the calessin, or rides behind when tired with running; but never ceases to hoot and strike the poor jade with his long whip to make it trot. I saw several of them this morning early, as I went on mule-back to see the Pardo; that is, one of the king's country houses about six miles distant from town, which my beast paced stoutly in less than an hour.

At the Pardo the king resides during two months in the year, merely for the sake of hunting in the neighbourhood; and his palace there is neither beautiful nor large, considering the owner; yet large enough to lodge both him and his whole family, who all have distinct apartments in it, none of which are richly richly furnished, but all very neat. the main body of the parace there are additional buildings, where the great officers and ministers of state have apartments when the court is there, together with stabling enough for about eight hundred horses, and a thousand mules. The main edifice was erected by the emperor Charles V. who delighted to retire there from bufiness; and his successors have always been adding fomething to it, in order to render it more and more convenient. When the (a) king is there, the place must look crouded, as several thousands of people constantly follow the court, and many are the great that come every morning from Madrid to show themselves to the king and royal family. The fituation of the Pardo is very romantick, having an eafy hill on one fide and an extensive forest all round. The trees in the forest are chiefly green-oaks, and their fweet acorns afford plenty of food to the innumerable animals that live in it. When the king is there, the greatest part of the rustics in the neighbouring villages get up before day at the ringing of their church-bells, and men, women, and children run about the country hooting and beating the bushes, in order to fright the game towards the Pardo, that the King may meet with abundance of it. His Majesty is a most astonishing marksman, and of his justness in shooting they tell here feveral stories that appear improbable, fuch as hitting with a fingle ball the fmallest and most fluttering birds while flying. Such stories the French will likewise tell of their King. An army of fuch markimen as either of the two monarchs, was it possible to bring one together, would foon conquer the world.

⁽a) Mr. Clark, Speaking of the Pardo, fays dryly, that it is " but an indifferent feat for an English country-gentleman.". I have feen many feats of English country-gentlemen too, but few as yet of those that could eafly contain such a family as that of the King of Spain, with his ministers, guards, mules, horses, Ga Ga family.

Vol. III. L Riding

di Riding about the folen of the Purds, my mule almost trampled apon mires, rabbits, and partridges at every step ! and I faw many a herd of red and fallow deer. Every person that beats the bushes round the forest, is regularly paid two reals a day; and this I suppose to be the chief means that the peafantry have there to live upon, as the country is otherwise very barren. I ran my mule fo far as a village called Sant' Agustin, and back to Madrid through another called Alcovendas. I am fure we have no fuch wretched places in Piedmont. In Alcovendas efpecially, there is not a house that deferves the name. I must call it a cluster of cortages, formed by walls of mud and most unskilfully thatched. Few of them have more than one room on the ground-floor, though feveral are inhabited by pretty numerous families. The fire-place they generally have in the midst of the room, and there is a hole at top to give way to the smoak. You may easily imagine that their eniDe/I their house furniture is all of a piece with their houses be A few earthen-plates and earthen-pots, with two or three frawbags. The hogs and the hens go in and out at will, and feem to live in the greatest intimacy with their owners.

My tour took up about five hours; yet I returned to town against dinner time, as it would not have been an easy matter to procure a dinner either at Sant' Agustin or Alcovendas. It was my intention on my arrival in Madrid, to go likewife to Sant' Idelfonfo and the Escurial's and I am fure that each place would furnich matter enough for a long letter. But I have confidered that if I go there, I must come back to Madrid another time, in order to adjust my departure: and to tell you the truth, I am quite fick of Madrid, as my head-ach is become intolerable. The people are civil, the people are cordial, the people I should like to live with a much longer time; but the horribleness of their streets hur-L2

their

ries

ries me away. I have therefore resolved to quit Madrid after to-morrow, never to return, except I hear that the King has rendered it clean, as they say that he is going to do.

The new great road from Madrid to the Pardo, has been partly cut through the forest not long ago. But so fond is the King of large trees, that he would not fuffer those to be felled which stood in the way. The road of course is far from being straight, having been made zig-zag in feveral places for the fake of this and that tree. About a league from town there is a venerable oak that flands exactly in the middle of the road, which the workmen were obliged to run on each fide of it. The king never fails to look at the oak with complacence whenever he goes by, often mentions his having faved his life (the oak's life,) and calls it his own tree. You will allow that this is tired to the Locan good-nature.

ries me away. I have therefore refolved

LETTER LX.

Blind men singing and playing. The Majo's dress. Carnival diversions. A description of the new Amphitheatre. Three bundred couples dancing at a time. Strange effect of the Fandango. Phrases of address. Guardias de corps. Guardias Alabarderos. Garrison of Madrid. Tables of the poor. Tables of the rich. Fish from Valencia. Wood for fuel and charcoal. Premature marriages, and why. Burials. Pictures exhibited by preachers. Gripes and bad teeth.

Madrid, Od. 13, 1760.

The death of the Queen has not only filled this town with numberless funeral sonnets in print, but her praises are ecchoed through these streets by several bands of blind beggars in Coplas and Seguedillas. To-night, as I retired to the Locanda much earlier than usual, to make ready for my departure to-morrow, I had one of those bands called up that flood chaunting under my windows. It confiited of three men and a boy, who had not one eye between them all. Two of them played on the guittar, one upon the violin, and one upon the violoncello. Had they been out of fight, I should not have guessed that they were blind on hearing them perform, but thought that they had a piece of mulick before them, fuch was their maftery in playing. They fat down in the great hall, and after a symphony very well executed, they fung alternately various stanzas of various measures, some premeditated and some extempore. them begin with the Queen; and of her they faid the most extraordinary things. Besides her possessing every moral and christian virtue, she was a blanca rosa, (a white rose) a palido álheli, (a pale gillyflower) a running stream, a fleet courser, a Shining star, and at last

L 3

La mas resplandeciente Diosa en el cielo, bene le avorrom or the brightest goddess in heaven.

What a jumble of images! yet do not call me idle when you fee me endeavour to paint little folks, and describe little We must hunt after the ideas and manners of the vulgar of every country, to form a just estimate of the nation that inhabits it; besides that whatever little knowledge I have of human nature, is chiefly due to the diligence with which I have long examined the lower classes, who to be fure have a cunning of their own, by which they endeavour to escape observation as well as their betters, but a gross fort of cunning that is easily detected. Could I stay here a while, I would take particular pains to make myself acquainted with all the characteristics that run through the meaner ranks of this people, and most especially with one called the Majo (pronounce make with a strong aspiration on the k) which, as far also I can conceive, is a fact of Iow person age between the poissand of Bariss and the city-spark of London to To explain my meaning better, the Madrid Maja is a low sellow who dresses sprucely, affects the walk of a gentleman, looks blunt and menacing, and endeavours after dry wit upon every occasion. These qualities run through both the sexes, and the Majo as well as the Maja can swear par vidal de Dios at every word. You say for instance, that this is a fine day, and the Majo confirms the observation that por vida de Dios the day is very fine.

Many amongst our lower vulgar, says Doña Paula are Majos and Majos, and in our Carnival Masquerades their dress is one of those which the generality of us chuse to assume as well as the character. That dress consists in the man, of a tight waistcoat, tight breeches, white stockings, white shoes tied with a ribband instead of a buckle, the hair in a net of various colours, and a montera over, instead of a batwoThe montera is a capof black velvers and off a particular cut, which fits the head exactly, and covers the ears. The Majo's habiliment is a tight jacket, fo open before as to form two hanging flaps under the breaft, fomething in the form of wings, with sleeves close to the fift, a short petticoat of any colour, a black apron, a striped handkerchief earefully covering the whole neck, with the net and the montera exactly fuch as the man. The feams of both dreffes are not fowed, but kept together by interlacing ribbands. This is à peu prés the vestment of our Majos and Majas on holy days, and I affure you that a young well-made person looks very smart in such a dress.

And so, said I, you have masquerades in carnival-time? Pray, dear lady, tell me something of them. Do you run about the streets with your visors on, like so many madmen, as we do almost all over Italy during that time?

ruo. colours, and a montera over, instead

Our common people does it, answered the lady: but the best fort do not. They only go in vehicles to visit each other, and endeavour to contrive their disguise in fuch a manner, that their most intimate acquaintance may be puzzled a while to find them out, which fometimes causes merry suspenses and mistakes. Many of us give masked balls during that time, and to them every person is admitted that is genteely marked. With regard to our masquerade-dresses, every body follows his own fancy. Befides the Majo's, many wear Dominos, and many more delight in the various habiliments used in various parts of Spain, which cuftom at crouded balls never fails to exhibit great variety. Thus we have el Catalan, el Galliego, el Valencian, and the antiguo Español; that is, the Catalonian, Galician, and Valencian dresses with the Ancient Spanish. Then the Serrano and the Culipardo; that is, the dreffes uled in the mountains of Old N. B.

Castile and Andalusia. These wear several holy relics and wax agnusdess, hanging about their necks, enclosed in small silver-boxes.

But to give you the several forms and characteristicks of our carnival-vestments, is beyond my powers of description, as it is scarcely possible to paint them by means of words. It is enough to tell you, that we endeavour on such occasions to surpass each other in fancifulness and elegance, but not in richness, as it is prohibited to wear gold, silver, and jewels about us in a masquerade dress.

To the carnival-balls, continued the lady, and on our frolicksome visits, we generally go in Parejas; that is, chacun avec sa chacune, both dressed in the same character, the Majo with the Maja, the Serrano with the Serrana, and so forth. But in the act of dancing almost every body takes off his visor, as it is deemed a slight on the company to keep it on.

N. B. To spare the reader the trouble of too prolix a note, I think proper to add here, that, fince the date of this letter, the carnival-customs have undergone some change at Madrid, as the King has built there a very grand hall, called el Amphitheatro, where thousands resort twice a week during the carnival-time. Any body masked is admitted there only for twenty reals (not quite five shillings) and passes there the whole night with as much pleasure as such a place can afford. There the dancing-place is spacious enough for three hundred couples to dance at a time, and there are feats round it, amphitheatrically disposed, with three large galleries over, which admit five or fix thousand people more. The hall has four spacious flair-vases at the four corners, that lead up to the galleries; and to several large rooms, where people may have hot and cold suppers at choice; coffee, chocolate, lemonades, and other refreshments, every thing near cheap as at home. A confiderable number or once the Frandang on Phint omthitheatre; and it is not possible to give an idea of such a all uniformly dreffed in attend, pompadour-colour. Befides these conveni encies, there are two large rooms with four beds in each, one for the men, the other for the women, who should happen to be taken fuddenly ill; and there are physicians and furgeons regularly attending, as well as four dancing-masters to direct the country dances, and teach their various motions and evolutions to those who do not know them well. Nor must I omit to mention two small rooms with inscriptions over their doors one Jaula por los páxaros, the other Jaula por las páxaras; 'that is, a cage for the cock-birds, a cage for the hen-birds; in plain language, a jail for the men and jail for the women. Should any body raife any disturbance, or behave with any indecency there, he would be shut up for the night by the guards attending at the entrance-door. other refreshmens,

I have seen above fix hundred people dance at once the Fandango in that amphitheatre; and it is not possible to give an idea of such a rapsurous diversion. The enthusiasm that feizes the Spaniards the moment that the Fandango is touched, is a thing not to be conceived. I faw hundreds of them at supper, quit instantly the tables, tumble precipitously down the stair-cases, throng promiscuously into the dancing place, face about for a partner that was found in an instant, and fall a dancing both men and women with fuch a vigour as to beggar all description. Was the place ample enough, there is not one of them that would remain a simple spectator, as many are forced to be. Those who are forced to it, stand gazing from the feats below or the galleries above, with Sparkling eyes and limbs trembling, and encourage the dancers with clamour and clapping of hands. There is a small printed book, intitled BAYLE de mascaras, &c. printed at Madrid in 1763, that fets forth the laws to be observed at the amphitheatre. Should any body contravene any of those laws, he would instantly be thrust into one of the Jaulas. The band there, confifts of farty instru-- Higgs mile instruments that play alternately twenty at a time, so that the dancing is never stopp a as long as the night lasts; that is, from nine o'clock at night till fix in the morning.

The facility that this place affords for diversion to the inhabitants of Madrid, bas nearly annibilated their private affemblies and domestick balls, which prove insipid in comparison of the great ball and assembly at the Ampbitbeatre. The profits that arife there from the suppers and rinfrescos, are sufficient to defray the nightly expences of the place; therefore all the money which is received at the door, (about a crown each person, as I said) is spent towards the embellishment of the public walks round the town. Thus has this government wifely turned a public diversion into a public utility, and Count d' Aranda, who has been the Schemer of it, has taken it under his own immediate direction, nor ever fails to be there every night to take care that nothing Janias. The band . the feaft. hand of T. . sains -พาริเกร

Among/

Amongst other laws, there is one, which probibits every body to wear gold or filver on their cloaths at the Amphitheatre; nor are the ladies allowed to have jewels about them, but at one finger. This law brings all forts of people upon a kind of level. To encrease this equality, they have also introduced the custom of talking to each other, and without any distinction of rank or fex, in the second person singular; that is, in the style used throughout Spain when people talk to the lowest rank, or to intimate friends. Thus the dutchess and the grandee are there brought down from the altitude of their ranks, during the night by their very domeflicks, and by those who out of the Amphitheatre would never dare to address them but by title of Vosselencia, an abbreviation of Vuestra Excellencia. But their temporary diminution of greatness, is amply recompenced by the jollity and alertness caused by this kind of equality. Let us now re-Sume the thread of our letter. Having

Having liftened a while to the four blind men who rehearfed the praifes of the Queen, and observing that the hall of the Locanda began to fill with people, who had run to their playing and finging, I bid them to touch the Fandango. Every body present began instantly to dance; but to their no fmall mortification the landlord Signor Zilio rushed in to disturb us all. Cospetonazzo, cried he to me in his native language, bid the fellows ftop playing, fir, or we are all undone. Don't you consider that the Queen is just dead, and this house an inn? Pray, stop them, or the Alguazils will be here in a minute, and carry us all to the devil.

This remonstrance I thought very just, dismissed the blind men with a few reals, and went to my supper, to the great difappointment of feveral maidens, who had affembled from the nigher houses at the found, and whose heels began to burn, as it is always the case throughout the

VOL. III.

dear Fandango.

What shall I tell you next? Whatever comes uppermost to be sure, and without thinking of pretty transitions from one article of information to the other, as it is not possible to connect the gs of different nature, but by bestowing more labour upon the mode, than the matter deserves.

The Spaniards have phrases of address that would found odd in all the Inguages I know. When a gentleman approaches a lady, he does not tell her that he is her humble servant, her most obedient, and so forth, as the men do to the ladies in Italy, France, or England; but that he kisses her feet, or lays himself at her feet. A sus pies, beso sus pies; and when he takes his leave, he intreats her to keep him at her feet y me tenga usted a sus pies; or have de sus pies, under your feet. The compliment she returns with a Biva usted mil anos, may you live a thousand years, or vaya mo you with God, go you with the Virgin Mary; and when the intends respect, she kisses your hands, Beso a usted las manos. You may think the Spanish civilities rather too great, I mean the language of the men to the ladies; but general custom takes off a good deal of the literal meaning from complimentary words in all countries, and the humility of this phraselology does not interfere with that great remaining from the lateral meaning from the lateral words in all countries, and the humility of this phraselology does not interfere with that great remaining the second of the literal meaning from the lateral words in all countries, and the humility of this phraselology does not interfere with that great the second of the literal meaning from the second of the literal meaning from complimentary words in all colony does not interfere with that great the second of the literal meaning from the second of the literal meaning from complimentary words in all colony does not interfere with that great the second of the literal meaning from the second of the lateral m

21012

King goes out of town, half a dozen of his Guardias de Corps precede his coach on horseback. Of these body-guards he has three companies consisting of two hundred men each, the Spanish, the Italian, and the Flemish, thus denominated from the nations that compose them. Their uniform is sky-blue trimmed with silver lace. Every individual in them is supposed to be de primera nobleza, christiano M 2 viejo, viejo, y limpio de toda mala raza; that is, of noble descent, a true christian, and free from all bad blood. I have obtained a list of the various articles of what the King allows them, amongst which there are some that you will possibly think curious. Here you have them.

A complete uniform every other years that is, a coat, waistcoat, and breeches.

A belt and a bandelier every other years

A silver bilted sword on being admitted, which is to be returned to the company in cofe of death or quitting the corps.

bair tinged red, every other year.

Two yards of black ribband, and a black ribband-rose yearly for the cue.

A pair of red worsted stockings yearly. The fourth part of a yard of muslin years by, for a stock.

A pair of strong leather gloves, yearly to A filk string yearly, to tie round the hilt of the sword; red to the Spanish company, is all the strong streets and all green

M 2 lowed

green to the Italian, and yellow to the Five and forty reals every two years for a couple of shirts.

One pound of charcoal every day, with feven candles and a half every month.

The pay to these guards is only a hundred and forty reals a month; so that he who has nothing from his own family, fares but very poorly, as you may imagine, though each company has the privilege of a butcher who sells them meat something under the market-price.

They are all pick'd men, young and robust; and they have need to be so, as the exercise of running before the King and royal family is very violent. All are lodged in Quarteles (barracks) wherever the King is, two, three, and even four in a room, the furniture of which consists of almost nothing else but their beds: that is, as many matrasses as there are men; matrasses not very soft, as they are filled with the coarsest tow. Each is allowed a pair of coarse sheets, to be washed ed once a month. It is nedless to tell you that their officers are all men of the highest rank.

These three companies of horse guards, together with another of foot called Guardias Alabarderos, are almost the (a) only military men to be seen in this peaceable town. The Alabarderos have in custody the inserior parts of the royal pa-

(a) Since the date of this letter, the flate of Madrid has Mrangely altered in this respect. The Sudden rising of the Inhabitants against the odious administration of Marquis De Squillace, on the 23d of March, 1766, has been the cause that a garrison of ten thousand men bas been establiffed in the town; nor does the King go now out of it without almost any guard, as it was formerly the cafe, but two files of foldiers border his, way from the great gate of his palace to more than half a league out in the country. The ten thousand men are lodged in different quarters; and patrole the town both a-foot and on horfeback, feveral hundreds every night. You may well think that the Madrid people will never more dare to rife, having fo formidable a body of regular troops to curb their spirit. Yet they carried their point at the time, as the hated Squillace was forced to quit the kingdom, and no tax laid upon bread, which was what gave the chief pretence to their infurrection. lace.

lace, and the Guardias de Corps stand centinels by turns in the higher apartments. Shold you want a distinct account of the land and fea-forces actually kept up in this kingdom, you have but to procure a Spanish almanack, where you will find that between both, they amount to about a hundred and fifty thousand.

Provisions are not so dear in this town as I expected, confidering its populoufness, and its being situated in a province that is far from being fertile. A poor family of fix or feven people may be daily supplied with bread, meat, and wine for as many reals. The bread here is as good as any where elfe; but the wine drank by the common people is not at all to my tafte. Beef, veal, and fowls, feldom come within the reach of a poor man's purse, but pork and mutton are cheap enough. The common fare of the lower classes is fresh mutton and falted, pork, boiled together with dry frenchbeans, chick-peas, onions, and pot-herbs. tace

On meagre days they feed upon stockfish and pilchards, which they dress in various manners, but always so hot with pimienta (Spanish pepper,) that it is not easy for strangers to accustom themselves to such a burning diet. The very poorest live almost entirely on the distributions of victuals that many convents make here every day throughout the year. There the beggar makes sure of a loaf and a mess of broth, often enriched with a sice of meat; and this I take to be the chief reafon that we are here so little incommoded by street-mendicants.

With regard to the tables of the rich, they are as sumptuous as any where else. A grandee of the first class was telling me the other day, that a full half of his income he must spend towards the maintenance of his table, and that income amounts to sifteen thousand pounds sterling; nor any reason could he give me of this prodigality; but that it is the custom to do so, and that every body does so. The single fingle article of fresh sish, stands him in two thousand pounds a year: but you must know that Madrid is provided with sish from Valencia, which is near seventy leagues distant.

I take to be wood for fuel and charcoal. A hundred pounds weight of either, costs near a crown. This is the cause, I suppose, that chimneys are not much in fashion here. The poor in winter stand basking in the sun, wrapp'd up to the nose in their ample Capas, and the rich sit round a brazier placed in the midst of a room, with well lighted charcoal in it.

rents marry their daughters much earlier than in other countries; and it is really a very common thing to fee girls bound in wedlock here, that are but twelve or thirteen years old. Amongst other reasons that parents have for such premature marriages, there is this, that a young woman may easily get the husband she pleases, with-without talking their confeht. She ther takes a faricy to a man, has birt to give him a ring or any thing elfe as a pledge of her resolution to be his wife, and infift that the will have no other hufband. The young man goes to his pariffi-prieft, apprifes him of his intention to marry fuch a woman, shews him the pledge he has of her love, and requires him to bring the marriage to a freedy conclusion! The priest goes to her parents, has Mils called before them, shows her the thing the gave, and asks her if it is true that the will have fuch a one for a hufband. Mils answers in the affirmative, and her parents must submit to fee her the wife of one who does not often meet with their approbation. Should they take into their heads to oppose the will of their girl, the priest carries her to a numery, where the is kept for a few days at a dif--tance from her fweet-heart; and if during those few days her parents cannot perofunde her to change her mind, the marriage

riage takes place in spight of them. I am told, that the other day a French-cook ran away in this manner with the daughter of an Advocate, his master. However, this law does not extend to the chief nobility, and girls of high condition cannot so easily provide themselves with husbands after their own liking; but amongst the middle and lower classes, I am assured that there are many couples married every year after this capricious manner, without causing the least wonder, as a thing of course.

have here, and throughout the whole kingdom, is, that when they are got with child, they are likewife fure of a speedy marriage, as the man whom they charge with the fact, must turn a husband directly, or go to prison, and endure more vexation than he could possibly bear. How far such laws and practices are conducive to the good order and general advantage of society. I will not take upon fonable to think, that the Spaniards find no great inconvenience arising from them to the commonwealth, otherwise they would soon abolish them, as it is not possible for any nation long to suffer a law or practice, that causes much distributed and proves highly inconvenient to the generality of individuals.

he Yet among the Spanish laws there is one, which I think a very good one; and it is, that no eldeft born of a granded, can marry the heiress of another. There is the Countefs of Benevente here, whose daughter is to inherit an income of fifty thousand doubloons a-year, and in confequence of that law, the is to be married to the fecond fon of the Duke d'Opuna, who as a cadet has not a ship ling. Could the eldest fon of that duke become her husband, he would be the richest subject in christendom; but the law will force him to marry one as poor as his younger brother; and thus will? Spain efissevine

Spain have two families infread of one, both fufficiently rich, which might poffibly not be the case without that law, thou

Here, as in Italy, the dead are carried to the grave with their faces uncovered and always preceded by a long proceffion of priests and people singing platms: and litanies as they go along with lighted: tapers in their hands. The grandees. are dreffed in their princely robes, and buried in them; but the rest of the people are habited like friars and nuns. The young and unmarried, have an additional crown of artificial flowers on their heads. You may eafily guess that the number of priefts and burning tapers is in proport tion to the means that families have of burying their dead with more or less pemp and splendour.

The friars, I am told, have lately introduced a practice here of producing pictures before their audiences towards the close of their fermons, in order to give their cloquence a greater degree of efficacyd T A ifriar, offor cinftances cafter having expatiated with as much ardour as posible on the torments of hell, nods to fome attendants to bring the picture, which exhibits fome devils running red and tharp irons into finners. The devils, as you may imagine, are painted most frightful, with horns, claws, vando ferpentine tails. The fouls are fymbolized by girls, for no other reason, but because the word foul is of the feminine gender in this, as in fome other languages The reverend father claps Ta slighted torch before the picture, that it may be better feen by the fpectators, and with the most hideous vociferation denounces everlasting torments to the amrepenting, like those that the painter has there expressed The preachers of England only endeavour to perfuade finners out of their wickedness; but the Spanish fright them out of it. Tis pity that the author of Fray Gerundio has not been countenanced in his project of reforming , Cincach, 4 &

forming the Spanish pulpit. A This pracdice which is here quite new, would drave furnished him with an additional chapter in a second edition of that book. be And here ends the narrative of what I have heard and feen during the week I thave now passed in this noble metropolis. -I hope you will find that the week has been tolerably well employed. Certain it is, that my account of it would have proved more ample and interesting, but for that filthiness, which forces me away. To that the physicians attribute a mortal kind of gripes, which may be called the peculiar plague of Madrid Another ugly effect of that filthiness is, that it spoils the teeth of these inhabitants. The Spaniards out of Madrid have in general fuch teeth, as really deferve the poetical appellation of ivory, but here the cafe is quite different. It is great pity, respecially with regard to women, whose black eyes, chearful mien, and lively moissand interaction in this project of reforming behaviour would subdue any Xenocrates, was it not for the ugliness of their mouths.

[176]

Mond to E B TOTE R LXL 10 124 LESO

bearing the distance of actions

Squares in every town to fight bulls in.

Cruelty inherent in man. A charitable woman. Small chapels by the fide of high roads. Colleges ruined or going to ruins.

Alcala de Henarez, OR. 14, 1760.

It I S morning about eight I quitted Madrid, and not without regret, as I met with no person there, but what endeavoured to please me. Without the gate at which I came out, there is an amphitheatre of a considerable size, where bull-sights are much oftener exhibited than in the Plaza Mayor already mentioned.

Fandango, one of the chief passions of the Spaniards. There is not a town in this kingdom, but what has a large square for the purpose of fighting bulls, and and foreigners as well as natives have repeatedly told me, that even the poorest inhabitants of the fmallest villages, unable to afford the expence of a bull, will often club together in order to procure a cow or an ox, and fight them riding upon affes for want of horfes. In former days no body was allowed to fight a bull on horfeback, that was not a gentleman born; but time has superseded this law, and at prefent bull-fighting is utterly engroffed by the lower classes. However from time to time gentlemen will venture their guts against the horns of a bull, to show their spirit or please a mistress, especially at the exhibitions in the Plaza Mayor, at which the King and the whole court never fail to be present.

I have no leifure to trace this custom of bull-fighting historically up to its origin; but it was certainly instituted by cruelty, or I am widely mistaken. The proneness to cruelty is inherent in man, and a characteristic of his nature. You

Vol. II. N ftartle,

ni farthe and are forny to hear me fay this: . Tree didayna truth, though a hard one; - withels the delight we take in doing mifbefore we reach the age of reflection; witness the brutal multitudes that meagerly run to fee shows of danger and blood; witness the athletic combats of othe Greeks, the gladiatorial wounds of the Romans, and fo forth. Crouds will gaze with rapture on a perilous (a) Kelo, or on cocks piercing each other's breaft with a sharp iron: crouds will furround the wretch who is going to be frangled, s broken, or burnt. Are not fuch inclinaations natural to us, and do they not imoliply an innate cruelty in our nature? Was -it not for education, that suppresses it, what a hateful breed mankind would at the door with both her band sworp

⁽a) An Italian show, in which a fellow ventures down a rope, one end of which is tied to the upper part of a steeple, and the other fastened to the lower of some opposite building. It has happened that such fellows lost their hold, and were shattered to pieces by the foll.

Such

sid Such were the thoughts the fram in my head, as I went by that amphitheatre. -li Notafar from it we croffed the Manza-- mares, and about a league further another Is small river called Xarama. They fay that bothe King has a plan to join them both in lone, and turn their streams to the purtopofes of agriculture. Could this ever be lidoney the country round would not look old uncomfortable as it does at present, Abeing quite fandy and destitute of trees. brue At the distance of two leagues beyond the Xarama, there is a small village call--ed Torrejon de Ardóz, surrounded by a few kitchen-gardens, and corn-fields. There we stopped to refresh; and while an omelet was making ready I took notice that the woman of the Posada stood at the door with both her hands full of quartillos, which she distributed amongst a number of poor who had affembled there to receive her alms. I made bold to ask her the motive of her liberality. Es por las animas, answered the woman; that N 2 Such that is, to relieve the fouls in purgatory. The animas in Spain, as I have already observed are a mighty mover of people's charity, and to them the beggars as well as the priests are much indebted, because their greatest income arises from the defire that all Spaniards have to alleviate the torments of the fouls in purgatory, which they think is infallibly effected by giving alms to the poor, and having malles celebrated by the priefts. The woman of the posada, as she told me, has fet apart four days in the year to distribute alms to the poor in her neighbourhood, and this day happens to be one of the four! wildling this of his pencow to the

As you travel through Spain you meet by the fide of every great road with chapels that go under the appellation of bermitas, though no hermit lives in them. These bermitas are all very small, and have no windows, but only a hole in the door, through which paffengers throw quartilles and ochaves in the infide, and all por pon las animas as ufual. I alighted the look into one of them through the hole of its door, but could fee nothing of what was in it except a lamp that scarcely gave any light. I asked the calesfero what was the use of a lighted lamp in a chapel where no body lived. Es para alumbrar les Santos de palo, answered the fellow in a mocking tone; that is, it is to light the Saints of wood, meaning the wooden flatues of faints usually placed in the bermitas, 10 I could not help wondering at the bold expression of the incredulous raseal, as I thought that the meaner fort through out the country never dared to make a jest of wooden faints; and rebuking him feriously for his levity of words, he added with fome archnels, that he was no Castilian, but a Catalonian, and that he had travelled through France. You have travelled to a very bad purpose, said I, if you have learned no better than to fcoff at what is held facred in your country, and I think you would do better to flick to your religion, left you come to any harm; nor does it belong to calefferos to break jests upon the Santos de palo, but their buliness is to mind their mules and avoid the inquisition. This reprimend, which he expected not from a foreigner, put him to the blush, and he is now making interest with Batiste, that I may not delate him to the Inquisitor General at Sarragozza.

TUOY

N 3

your

A little before five we entered Alcald. which is fix leagues from Madrid, and entered it by the gate of San Tago. Leaving the care of ordering supper to Batiste, I went to see the town. Some parts of it look very well, having feveral level streets, and a pretty wide square. There is an university here, that was once very famous. It was founded, fays the historian Mariana, about the end of the fifteenth century by an Archbishop of Toledo, upon the model of that at Paris; and, like that and many other, at confifts of a number of colleges built in different parts of the town.

The first college that I entered, is called del Rey (the King's) because it was erected by Philip III. So the porter told me, that has it in custody. That porter is now the only inhabitant of the college, which has long been deserted, and is visibly going to decay. The apartments formerly inhabited by the students, run round a square, ornamented with a double portico.

Coming out of it, I met with an Augustine friar at the gate of his cloyster, and bowing to him, begged leave to give a look to his church and convent. The friar courteously complied with my demand, and took me all over his and his brethren's habitation. Three of the altars in their church are worth seeing, and their sacristy is one of the finest rooms in Alcalà, curiously embellished with gilding and pictures. While I employed my eyes in examining it, a lemonade with N 4

some biscuits was brought me by another friany and as I was going to take my leave of them with thanks for their civility, they both infifted upon their coming to show me the town.

We passed before the jesuits' church, which was already thut. If the infide of it bears any proportion to the outlide. it must be very fine. Then we went to see the Collegio Mayor de Santo Idelfonfo, the grandell edifice in Alcala. It confifts of three large court yards. The first is the best of the three, as it is surrounded by three high portices, one over the other. There would be room enough in ... that college for four hundred students if it was in good order : but it is going to ruins, like that del Reg, fo that their number amounts to no more than fifteen or fixteen. They wear ample gowns and fquare caps, both the caps and gowns, of a faffron colour. A knot of them I faw, carnefly engaged in disputation, and took notice that they made use of the is town of infome

Latin tongue instead of the native, as they do likewise in most of our Italian universities; which is a bad practice in my opinion, as it accustoms young men to speak Latin with too great a laxity, and unclassically.

The two friars and I crossed the three court-yards, and passed by another college called de Santo Augustin, which in a very little time will be nothing but a heap of rubbish. Near it there is that of San Tomaso, deserted likewise, and tumbling to pieces. "In this college as tradition informs us, was the great dition informs us, was the great of the friars,) and when he came to be archbishop of Toledo, this university."

" flourished greatly under his powerful

" protection; but you see in what a con-

"We had here ten thousand students in " his time, and scarce a hundred are now

" left. Long wars, ignorance, and Salamança, have robbed this town of its ftu-

se Redents; and Madrid of our nobility doand gentry; fo that Alcala, once the " most glorious town in Castile, is now cone of the poorest in the kingdom !"od Thus discouring we went to the Cole legio de Malanga, formerly a larger edifice than even San Idelphonfo's. It contained once four or five court-yards with a nov ble portices round each ; but is now in the fame condition with those of San Tomafe and del Rey, or worfe. The best part of its walls is fallen into its cellars, and numberless spiders form their webs in the elefts of the broken steps of its principal Rair-cafe. In former times there has been room in it for about a thousand students. At preferr only one small corner of it is inhabited by half a dozentuli rebner of

I would fain have feen the rest of theso dismal colleges, especially that called the Irish, in which nobody is admitted a student, except he be a native of Ireland or Great Brittain, and a catholic abut night came on, so that I was forced to part company with my kind conductors and retire to the Posada. The habit of students in most universities is black ; but in this each college is distingished by a particular colour. That of the Irish is green, and their number has not amounted to a full dozen these many years, as the friars told me. They generally enter into orders when of a proper age, and then go back to their country as missionaries, and there endeavour to make converts to the Roman church. Out of nineteen or twenty colleges in this univerfity, two thirds are absolutely uninhabitable, and the other third in a mife rable plight, What a condition for a place that fo many men formerly strove to render illustrious by the cultivation of learning. If The chief cause of so woeful a decline, I take to have been the want of a permanent income. That want rendered it dependant on the royal treasury, and the dependance proved so precarious, that every college mouldered part away away by degrees, as the Kings of Spain happened to find that they wanted foldiers rather than feliolars.

VEWS

Alcold, called Completum by the Romans, did not in the fifteenth century reckon less than fixty thousand inhabitants, exclusive of the university. At present it contains but between four and five thousand, and very few amongst them that are opulent. For about twenty shillings sterling, I am told that a man may rent one of the best houses in the town of Ato a distance it appears to great advantage, being encompassed by a moorish wall that abounds with turrets like Toledo, and many other Spanish towns. This is not the town of the spanish towns.

of founding the line shief or these Seals pleated at the charteness of capital, of canedant at the capital, of canedant of capital, of canedant of capital, of canedant of capital of the capital of c

med to BIT TER TINY VEWS

Productions of some Spanish provinces. The life of a muleteer. River Nares. Cloth manufactory at Guadalaxara. A French cook. Hermita in a valley with an infeription on it, &c.

Torriss, OS. 15, 1769.

HIS morning I got up long beforeday-break, and walked alone to the Venta de Meco, which is about a league from Alcala, musing all the way out the hard fate of its university.

At that Venta I tarried about an hour, fitting on a tottering stool by a fire with nine or ten muleteers, who had passed the night there, and were making ready for Madrid, whither amongst other things they carry Aragonian beef and veal.

I found by the discourse of these people, that the veal and beef eaten in that capital, are chiefly gotten from Aragon; the pork from Estremadura; the mutton and sowls from Toledo and Leon; the seafash, legumes, and fruit from Valencia; the bread from Old Caftile, and the wine and cheefe from La Mancha. The greatest part of these provisions being carried thither by means of mules, incessant and long are the processions that one sees of those animals going backwards and forwards on every road round Madrid.

Having warmed myfelf well, as the morning proved very cold, and swallowed couple of fresh eggs, I took my leave of the muleteers, and went to wait for my calefferos at the Ventade San Juan, which is a league distant from that of Meco. San Juan's was also full of muleteers bound to and from Madrid. The poor fellows live a very hard life, pacing after the beafts during the day, feeding upon almost nothing else but chick-peas and falt fifh three times in the four and twenty hours, and fleeping at night on the bare ground in the stables by the side of their mules, each man wrapped up in a Manta, or mule-covering, with a packfaddle bavi faddle under his head by way of pillow. As far however as I have had opportunigities to mind them in this journey, git would not be an easy matter to find a more chearful fet of men than the Spainish muleteers. They scarcely ever appear weary a and in spight of their long walks during the day, they are always ofeady to fall a dancing wherever they breet with women at night, after having Arpaked and curried their beafts, and given them their cevada, or portion of chopped fraw. Nor are they less goodhumoured on the road, bantering each other as far as their wits can go, and ftill oftener finging in chorus; which constinual exercise renders their voices very flexible, so that many of them please the car very well, and very few disgust it, bbe their skill in finging ever so indifferent. They look in general very manly, being of a good stature, and perfectly well dimb'de nor would a painter disdain to draw their brown faces, frequently adornfaddle ed thick lips. I have feen them at their victuals, and envied the goodness of their stomachs, though far from wanting one myself ever fince I entered Spain, excepting only the week that I have passed in Madrid. The greatest part of them drink at a meal more than I could in three days, nor have they their borracho's ever empty; yet none of them ever gets drunk, ebriety being the vice that is most detested by the Spaniards both high and low.

About eight o'clock my calefferos overtook me, and we travelled three leagues further to Guadalaxara, a town that contains between fix and seven thousand inhabitants, as I am told. About half a mile before we reached it, we crossed the noisy river Nares on a bridge of boats, because that of stone which was over it, has been broken down this fortnight past by a sudden encrease of the waters.

and the Manufacture of the Manufacture of the

Heray

The inn at Guadalaxara is by much the best that I have as yet seen in Spain-It is kept by a fat Frenchman, who, befides a foup and some ragouts, gave me a brace of excellent partridges and a fpitful of small birds for dinner. While it was preparing; I went to fee-the cloth, manufactory, which, next to that of Segoving is reckoned to be the greatest in the kingdom. I counted feventy-four looms all in one room on the groundfloor, and feveral more in other rooms above-frairs. The director of the manufactory, a very civil Biseayan, took me all about the place, explaining every thing that wanted explanation. He showed me various specimens of the cloth, and affured me, that about four thousand pieces of it have been yearly made there during these three years past. No cloth is made there but what is superfine; however, as he faid himfelf, they do not yet make it fo tight and durable as the fuperfine cloth of England. Their scarlet is the VOL. II.

the most esteemed; and the Biscayan pretends that its colour is quite as vivid as that of the Gobelins.

The house where this manufacture is, was formerly the palace of a grandee, who fold it to the king. The courtyard of it is adorned with feveral pedestrian marble statues, which will soon tumble from their pedeltals, if nobody takes more care of them than the director does. The keeping up of this manufacture costs his majesty several thousand doubloons yearly, that the cloth may be fold at a moderate price, which could not otherwise be done; the expence of the workmen being now too great, as they are almost all foreigners kept there by exorbitant pay. The director is in hopes, that in a few years many of the natives will learn the trade; and then, fays he, the manufactory will not depend entirely on the king's munificence, as it does at prefent. Mr cloth of England

IL JaV

The French Posadero told me at dinner, that during the three following days I should find no grapes on the road to fill my basket as usual: yet I had not gone a league in the afternoon, but I found his information as falle and ridiculous, as it was unwelcome. Just a league from Guadalaxara there is Taracena, a village that looks well at a diftance, the territory of which is all planted with vines. I did not go through the village, but left it on my right hand, and about half a mile from it faw an Ermita; (you know not what an Ermita is) that had this infcription in large letters pafted on the door :

El illustrissimo senor don Juan Francisco Manrique de Lara, Bravo de Guzman, Obispo de Placencia, concede quarenta dias de indulgencia a todas las personas que rezaren una salve delante de la imagen de nuestra senora de el Valle, que se venera en su Ermita de la Valle de Taracena.

0 2

In

In English, "The most illustrious ford haden stable Francis. Mannique de Lara, Brave de Gusman, bistop of Placentia, grants fonty days indulgence to every body that shall recite a (a) salve before the image of our Lady of the Kalley, which is venerated in her hermitage (of chopel) in the Kalley of Tarracena."

foription is too unimportant to delete copying and translating. But, besides that I must now make the most of every trifle, if I will fill my nightly setters, having no time to stop for enquiries after mightly things, you must likewise consider, that what appears a trifle to one, may not be thought so by another. You will probably not be the only readers of my imperary. If you like it, you will be glad to have it read by your friends. I shall think of printing it myself, if I find it approved by many of them; and who knows but amongst those that shall read it, feveral may never have known what they will learn from this infeription, that the bilhops of our church enjoy the privilege of granting forty days indulgence to the recitors of a fabre before a madona? But, pray, brothers, what do you think the most part of the Greek and Roman infcriptions, that fill fo many folios in every, antiquarian's tibrary? Unimportant trifles like this, in my opinion revet many of the most learned men in all ages and countries have thought fit to employ a confiderable part of their time in collecting, explaining, and illustrating them. My infeription compared to theirs, has to be fure, the great difadvantage of being a modern one; but fill, I must endeavour to preferve it, for the fake of many a scholary that shall come into the world two or three thousand years hence; and who knows but some future Gravius or Spanbenius may thank me for it, and Va! 0 3 with that I had copied not only every inscription on the doors of the Spanish Ermitas, but even every bit of nonsense written with chalk or charcoal on the walls of all the Spanish Ventas and Pojadas? And here I must apprize you, that sew are the Posadas and Ventas which have not their walls covered with mottos, proverbs, sentences, and ribaldry, both in prose and verse.

⁽a) A Latin Prayer to the Virgin Mary, which begins a Salve regina mater misericordize.

From the Ermita we went on along the valley mentioned in it. The valley is a league in length, and about a mile broad ... It lies between two mountains, whose dismal barrenness contrasts very well with its pleasant fertility. On the right hand the ground is planted with vines, now loaded with grapes; and on the left with olive-trees, intermixed with fycamores and fig-trees. At the end of the valley there is a small town, called Val de Noches, which, they fay, was The native place of Hernando Cortes, the renowned conqueror of Mexico. Beyond Val Min

Val de Noches there is another valley near as long and broad as that of Taracena; and ftill more beautiful than that terminated by a great number of kitchengardens, that furround this village of Torrixa; at the entrance of which there is a Moorish castle, formerly a noble edibut now in a most ruinous condition. The Posada here is still better than that at Guadalaxara; I mean with regard to the building, and the rooms in it, which are pretty neat. The supper that the Posadera gave us, bears no proporner we had from the Frenchman; but the woman fat down with me and Batiffe, which made the victuals more palatable, because she is as great a beauty as the fair Catalina at Badajoz."

renowned ton query of Mexico Beyond

renowned ton query of Mexico Beyond

renowned ton query of Mexico Beyond

de. Noches there is another valley near here a final a far aleganes.

A dialogue between a traveller and an after driver. The urbanity of a grandee.

The highest top in Spain. Cheap rent of houses.

Alsoles del Pinaz, Oct. 17, 1960, aboutlacin.

A 5 T night I flept at Algora, and would, as usual, have written from thence, had I found a table to write upon in that forry Venta. But why do I give it the epithet of forry? The marquis de Castromonte, who is a grandee of the first class, sodged there as well as myself; and a place that affords a lodging to such a personage and his numerous retinue, ought not to be called a forry one,

But let us proceed with our customary method, and tell the story of yesterday and to-day with due regularity.

Yesterday morning, setting out by break of day, we went to dine at Granjanejo,

The

janejo, a small village about four leagues from Torrixa, and faw no kind of habitation during those four leagues, excepting another village called Triqueque, which lies at fome distance from the main road. But fail you not to take notice here, that I am very punctual in naming all the inhabited places I fee, and fet down their relative diffances with as much exactness as travelling will permit, that I may enable you to form some fort of idea of the populousness of the provinces I am croftheving on in this manney & Sine

We could have had no dinner at all at Grajanejo, had it not been for some fowls ready roafted, that we got from the Frenchman at Guadalaxara, However, we had a large fire, which was as necesfary as the dinner, because the weather was very cold, though it had been infupportably hot only three days ago at Madrid. The reason of this difference is, that fince we left Alcala we have been going up the great mountains of Aragon. ימוננים"

ner colder and colder at every step. From Grejancje to the Vente of Algora there are sour leagues, which I resolved to pace in the afternoon, in spight of a frozen breeze that blew from the north. Leaving therefore Batiste with the calesseros, I entered an ample forest, chiefly composed of those oaks, the acorns of which have a sweet taste, and I chewed many of them by way of alleviating the tediousness of my lonely walk.

Journeying on in this manner I overtook a fellow who drove some asses before him, and joined company with him. Who are you, cavallero, said I, and whither are you going with these asses?

Senor cavallero, said he, I am a poor labourer, and live in the mountains of Burgos. I am going to wifit the milagrosa nuestra Senora del Pillar at Zaragozza, and these asses belong to some cavalteros, who were pleased to give me something for my driving them a few leagues."

But,

But, said I, who is this miraculous Lady of the Pillar you go to pay a visit to? I am a stranger here, and never was in this country before; so I shall be obliged to you if you will inform me of her.

" man, is a famous image worshipped in a great church at Zaragozza. She is as "much esteemed throughout the world (en todo el mundo was the expression) as "those of Gaudeloupe and Monserrate, "because she is quite as miraculous as they, if not more."

And are you paid, said I, for going to pay ber a visit so far as the mountains of Burgos to Zaragozza?

"Paid, fir, faid the fellow, quit surprized at my question. Paid? And who should pay me for it? Nobody goes to visit a nuestra Senora for pay."

This is what I did not know, said I.

But still, what is your motive for going so long a journey a-foot, and not amply supplied with money, as you gave me reason to think.

when I go, faid he, because I made a vow

Isoppose, said I, that you are a batchelor, and have nobody at home to mind, since you chuse to stroll so far.

Excuse me, said he; but I bave a bave a family. But who takes care of them, while you are upon this errand?

Nuestra Senora del Pillar, said he, will take care of them, and send them of some elemosnita (small alms) to support themselves during my absence.

nothing else to rely upon, but the alms that the boly Lady is to find them?

Nothing elfe, indeed, faid he; for we

But pray, my good man, would it not bave been better for you to flay at bome, and work for their bread and yours, rather than to abandon them to the chance of an element mita?

'm sicik

" Sir,

Sir, said he, I beg your pardon for saying, that you foreigners do not under frank religion so well as we. I bare beard it said once by a reverend person that foreigners prefer their intenss to their religion, and that me prefer our religion to our interst. I shall never for get that saying. And must I not think of my religion before I think of my family, being as I am, a christiano viejo? Must we not accomplish aler vows when sue have made them?"

The argument of my old christian was too strong for me to reply. Therefore, putting some quartillos into his hand, i wished him a good journey to his mila-grosa Senora, and slackened my pace. The calessers overtook me, and we reached the Venta just as the sun was going down.

Sir, said the Ventere, I am forry I have not the least room for you, as the whole of house is taken up by a grandee, who is in justarrived.

This

Gestionate, already mentioned. He is on his return from Venice, where he has been ambassador some years. He travels with a considerable number of servants, and sends a courier before, to bespeak the Ventas and the Posados wherever he is to pass a night. It was now too late for me to think of advancing surther to the next posado. What could I do in such a situation? I took my resolution in an instant, and answered the Ventero, that I would make a shift to seep in the stable on my straw bag, if it was not possible to get a room.

the marquis came to the door, and, guessing at the subject of our discourse, approached me courteously, and asked me what countryman I was. I told him my country, together with my present distress. We must manage better, said he to the Ventero, than to send this gentleman to sleep in the stable. Let me see,

Pedrillo (speaking to one of his men) what room have you got? That next your excellency, faid Pedrille Well, my lad, (replied his excellency) thou must have patience for one night, and accommodate this stranger with thy room. Thall take care of myfelf, faid Pedrille in very good humour, and there is room chough in the stable, brie rains williang? My lodging being thus luckily fettled, Tentered the Venta with the marquis, who politely forced me to fit with him. by the kitchen fire-fide, together with his lervants and leveral muletteers, and infifted upon my partaking of his supper, which was dreffing at the fame fire. It was fet before us two hours after, and proved as sumptuous as any that was ever eaten in fo poor a place. You may well think that we were not wanting in chitchat during the time. We talked of Venice, Madrid, and London, till midnight, and he feemed as much pleafed with my loquacity, as I was pleafed with his affability.

fability. Had he been fo referved and proud as the Spanish nobility are confantly represented in French romances and Italian farces, I should have passed but a very indifferent night by forme nule, horse, or als. In our long converfation we lamented the narrowness, inconvenience, and wretshedness of the Spanish Ventas and Posadus s but he informed ime, that a februe had been thought on in Madrid, to render those on the principal roads better, by inviting Acangers to heep them. How this will be contrived I don't know : but it will certainly not be an eafy matter, to have good inne in a country to little vifited by travellers as this iser su eroled tel and.

Batific to make amends to honest Pedrillo for the trouble I had caused him; but Pedrillo has a soul, and desired Batiste to keep for himself what I intended for him.

aff.bility.

I must not forget to say, that last night I saw a Moorish castle, built on the top of a hill, not far from the venta of Algora. There is never an end of Moorish castles in this region; but I could spare no time to go and give a look to the ruins of that, as the days are shortening apace, and we must now travel somewhat faster than usual, that we may not reach the posadas too late at night.

It is now near noon, and we have already gone four leagues. About an hour ago we mounted a rugged steep, where my chaise was several times in danger of being overturned, and came to this miserable village of Alcoléa, which the Spaniards believed to be the highest place in this kingdom. They affirm, that the highest top in the Pireneans is a mile lower than this, and am almost disposed to believe them, when I consider that we have been insensibly ascending these three days, and during no less than four and twenty leagues.

Vol. III.

P

A Postscript from Maranchen at night. wo Coming down a freep and broken road from Alcolda, we reached this place at fun-fet. The posada, where we intended to alight, was fo crowded with muletteers and other people, that the landlord had no room to spare us: but, as this is a village, and not a venta, it was not difficult to find a lodging in a peafant's house. A large number of women of all ages, environed me as I alighted, wanting me to buy bread, fowls, pigeons, game, eggs, and other eatables, of which each of them had her balket full. The house, in which I have taken up my quarters for the night, is perhaps the best edifice in the place, as it confifts of feven rooms; for which the landlord tells me, that he pays but four pefos duros rent, fomething less than twenty shillings a year. At this rate faid I to myfelf, I should be but a very poor lord, if I was the lord of Maranchon. The village confifts of about two hundred houses, and he would be but but indifferently rich, that was the proprietor of them all! Confider then how poor the occupiers of these houses must be, the greatest part of whom are not even mafters of that in which each of them lives. Yet these people look much better than the inhabitants of all the villages I left behind me to the women especially, appear very clean. They tie their treffes with filk ribbonds, have filver rings to their ears, and filver croffes to their necks. Their chief trade confifts in bringing up fowls and pigeons, and there is not a muletteer or caleffero that comes this way, but makes an ample provision of them, to fell them again in the neighbouring towns. These women are very happy when they can fell a couple of large fowls to a traveller for three-pence English, and a dozen of eggs for a penny: I have had a supper to-night that would have sufficed fix people, and my bed, as well as Batifte's, are (exclusive of Madrid) the fofteft and best that we have as yet had fince but P 2

we left Lifbon: yet the whole reckoning amountsnot to a shilling. I was told in Madrid, that the duke of Medina Celi is proprietor of near four hundred villages in Old Castile. If this is true, they must be much worse than Maranchon, as his income amounts only to fixty thousand pounds sterling, two-thirds of which arise from lands, mills, and other tenements in other parts of Spain. Was he poleffed of as many villages within two hundred miles round London, he would undoubtedly be richer than all his brother grandees put together; fuch is the difference between a country that is commercial, and one that is not is an in need

obwhite I diare cheques arbear is herear fore with representation of the forest are per too tradity again of, in attention of the forest are per too tradity again materials, an about or consum a doddyne had forest upprice the top about winds as a serve field would be or the first and the consuments of the consuments

all and belt that we have asset and dince

we left Lifbone with an artist reckoning

Good accounts not to be written from small places. Idustrious country - women.

Some extempore singing. No such thing among the Arabs.

eline dontwito Think Tortuéra, Oct. 18, 1760.

the HE story of this day is so very short, that it might be dispatched in half a dozen lines, if I had a mind to it; but the habit of scribbling at night is now become so strong, that I must be at it, whether I have a subject or not, and must tell not only what I have heard or seen during the day, but even some pare of what I have thought: bear it therefore with patience, brothers, should any of my future letters prove too scanty of materials, or should words in a good measure supply the place of facts. You would be unreasonable to expect from ventas, villages, and petty towns, such accounts.

P

dride programme the self was period from Ma-bed The further I advance into Arragon, the better I find the inhabitants in many respects. From Alcala to this place I have not yet feen one of those disgustful female beggars, who go about Estremadura with an image in their hands, and force you to kifs it whether you like it or not. Many were the women who encircled my chaile to-day at Banbazil, Terra Molina, and Poncha; but, instead of begging, they offered to fell us balkets of fowls, pigeons, partridges, thrushes, eggs, cabbages, onions, garlick, honey, grapes, and other eatables. The balkets they held hanging on their left arms, that they might employ their hands in Ipinning, which they continued to do even while they were talking, as if afraid of lofing time. I never faw a fet of country-women that I liked better. Most of them were habited in coarse asloowe extempore the praises of the wollen stuff, but both old and young looked very neat. The old wore monteras, or woollen caps; but the young had their heads bare. They tie their hair on the highest part of the head, and let it fall down their backs, divided in two tresses. Many had silver buckles to their shoes, besides their silver ear-rings and neckcrosses. I complimented two or three of the prettiest, on their beauty and their neatness, and my notice was received with a curtesy and a smile.

oned force

We dined at Terra Molina, and came to pass the night in this village of Tortuera, which deserves the appellation of a market-town. As I alighted, I heard guittarists playing as they were going along the street followed by a croud. Impelled by my usual curiosity, I joined that croud, and stopped with them under the window of a muchacha muy guapa, as I understood upon enquiry. The two sellows who drew us after them, began to sing extempore, the praises of the P 4 bandsome bandsome maiden, and said so much of her beauty and virtue, that they could not say more if she had been a composition between Venus and Sancta Theresa. Yet their exaggerations had not force enough to induce her to come to the window, because she was not at home, as one of the by-standers humorously observed. However they went on very briskly for an hour, singing alternately a Seguedilla each, sincering at each other sometimes; that is, when the assonance or the rhyme happened to be lame, or the verses somewhat shorter or longer than the metre allowed, which raised several laughs.

The verification of the two bards, nor did the verification of the two bards, nor did the t

atominates gr

is I own, brothers, that I am not a little proud when I think I am probably the first traveller who took notice of this peculiarity of extempory-finging in thefe regions. Whether the Greeks and Romans fung thus, or not, I have not erudition enough to ascertain. But there is a passage in Homer, and one in Wirgil, that lead us to think their refpective countrymen were not perfect frangers to this custom. Homer introduces the poet Phemias to fing extempore at the table of Penelope's fuitors; and though the verses sung by Phemias are composed by Homer, yet Homor would not (I think) have produced an extempore-finger in the Odyssey, if the custom of unpremeditated finging had not been practised in Greece. Virgil gives us the dialogue of two thepherds and a though longitude

Et cantare pares, & respondere parati;

and

dicates, or feems to indicate, that the practice of finging extempore was not unknown to the ancient Romans.

Whether we can infer from these two paffages that the Romans and Greeks were addicted to this pleafing exercise of the mental powers, I dare not take upon me to decide; but it is fure, that neither the French nor the English (the two most polithed nations of the age) have this practice; and I do not recollect any account of any other people, ancient or modern, that had it. Yet it cannot be prefumed that the Spanish and Italian are the two only nations endowed with imaginations sufficiently fiery, as to posfels this gift exclusively of all other nations. There are, possibly, many more that do, or have done the fame; but which they are, or where, we know not; or, to speak more properly, I know not. I only know that I read the article through in Cafiris's Catalogue of the Arabic

Arabic Poets; but could find neither trace nor hint that the Arabs had this practice, though the Arabs feem to have been as poetical a breed as ever existed.

It is needless to tell you, that after supper we have had an hour of dancing. I forbear to tell you this whenever it happens, merely to avoid repetition.

OW LETTER LXV.

suprobable but the Branchin appliber

Many ruined castles, and why. A French Pilgrim. Absurd waste of wax. A Spanish Eunuch.

mailed bas fames Daroca, Ost. 19, 1760.

A T the distance of a league from Tortuera, we crossed this morning a village called Embid, where I took notice of a castle in ruins on a neighbouring hill. The Spanish vulgar bestow the appellation of Moorish to every ruined castle in the kingdom: but the empire of the Moriscos was not of long duration, therefore, it is not easily to be supposed, that they could or would erect such a number of large buildings, as is to be seen throughout these two provinces. Then many of the ruins themselves bettray a taste of architecture much unlike that of the Moriscos; therefore it is not improbable but that the greatest part of those castles were nothing more than the houses belonging to the ancient nobility and richer gentry, who formerly did not use to live constantly in great towns, as it is the universal custom at this present.

From Embid to Used where we dined, there are three leagues. The intermediate country looks extremely fertile, and is full of trees of various kinds.

Mere chance apprifed me to-day that the Spaniards do not eat meagre on Saturdays, as we do in Italy, though the religion of both countries is the fame. I do not know the reason of this difference;

effer

the scarcity of fish in the inner provinces of this kingdom, too distant from the sea, and not abounding in rivers. I wonder I did not take notice of this peculiarity during my stay in Madrid. I see by this overlight that I am guilty of inattention, as well as all other travellers.

Strolling about the town of Used while dinner was preparing, I met with a Frenchman in the habit of a pilgrim, and afked him to dine. He accepted of the invitation, and gave me an account of his long rambles through Spain and Italy. Being croffed in love by his father, an apothecary at Bourdeaux, he ran away from home, and has led a most erratic life these five or fix years, scarcely ever staying a whole day in one place. Not being aware that he was talking to an Italian, he gave me but a very indifferent account of the charity of our friars, to whom pilgrims have a prefcriptive right to apply for food when preffed pressed by hunger. Our Italian pilgrims, in his opinion, are likewise a hateful race, and he assured me, from his own repeated experience, that nine in ten are mere vagabonds and thieves; which is not the case with those in Spain, where people of some consideration, and sometimes gentlemen, undertake to go a pilgrimage to Loretto and Rome, impelled by motives of devotion.

As he is but a young man, I endeavotred to perfuade him to return to his father, and procure a pardon for his defertion, which may probably be eafily obtained after fo long an absence; but he is absolutely resolved to go on in his present way of life, and walk from fancwary to fanctuary for ever, without ever going out of this kingdom, where alms are feldom denied to pilgrims at convents and by the country people. You have heard that Spain is not wanting in fanctuaries, and he has visited them all several times already. He told me a great many things cafily things of San Yago de Compostella in Galicia, and of Nuestra Senora de Monferrate in Catalonia, that would be worth relating; but I apprehend that his accounts are inaccurate, and I will not enter into long details upon the bare word of a stroller, of whom I know nothing. As he feemed to have some fort of school-education, I advised him to keep an account of his rambles, and was going to give him fuch directions as I think proper on fuch a fubject; but he has now been fo long without handling a pen, that he cannot use it with facility; and I don't question but he will soon lose the power of writing, having been very flow in writing a fentence with my pencil. I would give much for an exact journal of fuch a rambler; and am fure it would prove very entertaining, was it done with any degree of skill. He travels on leifurely, begging his way, and relying intirely upon the chance of people's charity. But fince an alms is cafily things easily obtained in this country, I wonder that the number of pilgrims is not greater, this being the only one that I have as yet seen in Spain.

A league on this fide Ufed we croffed

444.0

a village called Sanfed, which, like Embid, has a ruined castle on a neighbouring eminence. Going still onwards another league, we found ourselves on the fummit of a mountain, where we had strait before us a wide prospect of a great number of barren hills, gradually rifing one behind another. There I alighted, and, quitting my calefferes, and the great road, walked along a shortening path to the town of Daroca, which lies at bottom of a most beautiful valley. A small river that runs by it, fertifizes it greatly, and renders it a delightful fpot. The landscape round the town is pleafingly divertified by rocky cliffs, some of which are very high. Zuccarelli's fanciful pencil never drew any thing fuof Jania managers of the sections perior perior to the romantic environs of Having waited half an hour at the Posada for the arrival of my people, and ordered supper, I went to see the town, which is but little, yet not ill-built. I entered a church, in which a benediction was just going to be given. Its principal altar was lighted with at least three hundred tapers; and a numerous band of mulicians from the organ-place filled the air with harmony, both vocal and instrumental. I fee that the Spaniards are no better economists than the Italians in the article of illuminations in churches. Like us, they waste more wax in them than the country can afford; fo that, like us, they are obliged to procure a good deal from foreign parts. I have long wondered at our Italian governments, that never would suppress, or at least restrain this idle expence of ours. But this is not the only instance of absurd administration amongst us and the Spaniards.

Vol. III. O

At the abovebenediction I heard an eunuch fing, and asked a by-stander whether he was an Italian or a Spaniard. Arragones como yo (an Arragonian like myfelf) was the laconick answer. But pray replied I, have you also the handsome custom here that they have in Italy, of mutilating children to make muficians? We have no fuch custom, answered the man. This finger, they fay, was a poor boy that fuffered castration in hospital at Zaragozza in consequence of fome diffemper : This gave him his fine voice, and his voice obtained him patrons, and as he has turned prieft, our bishop has procured him a good chaplainship in this town. He is a Licenciado, and condescends sometimes to sing in churches on festival days. more barren the land appears Mainar to the venta de San Martin (another league) the country's quite a defart That produces nothing, except rolemary, spike, thyme, a and other fuch thrubs, which the abovepened clon I heard an

Mi Mov

Burren country. Shrubs that ferve for fuel. A Pochéro. A lonely place. English ver and Spanish dogs. A plant of thyme emplucked up, and why. Don Diego and, to bis little daughter. Garnache, an ex-Sangellent moine.

offom, answered

. dari ,co. 150 ,congires, Oct. 20, 1766. Begin to be ashamed of the repetition; yet I cannot help faying, that close to the village of Retascon, and a league from the town of Daroca, there is on an eminence a castillo morisco; that is, another caftle gone entitely to ruins,

During that league and the two fellowing, to a knot of poor houses, called Mainar, the more you advance, the more barren the land appears : but from Mainar to the venta de San Martin (another league) the country is quite a defart that produces nothing, except rofemary, fpike, thyme, and other fuch fhrubs,

Q 2

which

which serve the inhabitants instead of fuels of the careely have surfaced my dog to eather

as Having fet out this morning three hours before my calefferos, I reached that wenta a foot. There I should have been glad to find a bed to throw myfelf on for a couple of hours : but the house is fmall, and every room in it had beens taken up by a gentleman called Done Diego Martinez, who with his lady and fervants had reached the place an hour before me, in a coach and fix mules, I bets Besides rest, I wanted likewise foods By good luck the man of the venta had his pochero ready; that is, a mels of garvanzos (chick-peas) boiled to a pap in oil and feafoned with garlick, onions, and pepper, i befides an ample difh of falt-fift alfo fried in oil, as butter cart not be the produce of this gravelly foil I fell to with the ventero and his familyo and never eat with a keener appetite, il having walked full fixteen miles in less than five hours In London I fliouid taylearnald pretty fatiguing, because of which ferve the instead of fearcely have fuffered my dog to eat of Sich a dinner i but in fuch a place as the venta de San Martin, a man must not be too delicate; befides that a walk of fixteen miles in a cool morning, will make one think that any food has an admirable relished However, to make amends for the strange victuals, the ventime's wife produced a piet or skin-bag, full of a smoft excellent Carinena wine? and I fucked out at the cock for often and do kindly, that my fpirits were entitely recruited, and my weariness forgot inchalf an hour sant in the en when a sid

Having thus dined, I went out of the wente, which lies at the foot of a fronvi hill. The afcent of it, meafured by thes eye, may be about half a mile. of A fit of curiofity feized me to know how then country looked from the fummit of that hills and without losing as moment in deliberation I went up the aftenty which proved freeper than I thought it ava diftanke, and pretty fatiguing, because of becaule were malos; that is, the lookenes and smallness of the sanct on which I walked : yet I did not turn back, and in about half an hour I was where I wanted to be; that is, on its highest part, from which I could fee nothing but other fmall hills, lying one behind the other, all barren, all defolate, all filent. No house, no habitation could I discover from thence, except the venta beneath. Nothing but an panded wilderness as far as the eye could reach. The ground on that fummit produces absolutely nothing but thyme, that perhaps nobody ever thought of couching for centuries past. I plucked up a stalk of it, near as big as my wrist, and put it in my pocket, with an intention I shall tell you by and by.

Mhile I was going up that hill, I foy'd a large flock of sheep at some distance, and changing my direction, went towards it, having a mind to ask the sheepherds some few questions: but one of them cried out to me not to approach, because because his perros were males; that is, his dogs were wicked. I obey d his command, and continued to go upwards. The English value themselves upon the ferocity of their dogs, that never will let go their hold when they have once fastened their teeth in live flesh, were you to cut them limb by limb. Yet no English dog would be an overmatch for one of those that guard the Spanish sheep, as they are so fierce, that they will not only face in fingle combat the biggest wolves of the Pyreneans, but frangle them in a moment, being both fliong and nimble. I am told that they will let alone any paffenger that comes a head of their flocks, but will attack those that reach them from behind, if the thepherds are not ready to interpole. I noit

The reason I had for wishing to talk to some of those sheepherds, was to ask lower questions about their sheep, and the long walks they take with them:

but they seemed in hatte to cross the character of the defart, defertors theep do not eat thyme, and nothing elfe is there for them to reason I have heard that the Spanish shepherds lead their flocks from province to province, stopping to feed wherever they meet with proper pasture asortheyo go along; nor can they be hindered by any proprietor of land from for doing provided they pay him a certain price that the law has fixed. Some particularities of those sheep-walks I wanted to learn from the shepherds, and their manner of disposing of their wool, its price, chief markets, and for forth : but, as I faid) they were in motion, and their dogs hindered my approach are on gol vidado'iq Continuing my progress upwards, and reaching the top of the hill, I advanced a little on a narrow flat that is there looked round, plucked up the mentioned plant, and looked round again and again on every fide. After having thus confidered the awfulness of the folitary wile dernels, I fat myfelf down on tallfone; and image, and faid to myfelf a What a place for I meditation is here, in the midfor this sheremal abode of filence! here is viol soman, no beaft, no bird, nothing to "make the least noise. Let me link inso to fome reverie, and try how far my "candiftarbed thoughts will go." Panols -oSaying this I leaned my head upon my hands, and fell a-thinking. About what A plague upon my foolish imagi manionpi that would offer nothing to me but the black-eyed Paolita of Badajoz! I wonder how the entered my thoughts fointneasonably ! was there nothing else to think on, but a girl, whom I shall probably fee no more? could Inot think of the earthquake of Lifbon, of the ruins of the university at Alcala, of the king of Spains or some sother great thing I no 1 Paolita got in on a fudden, I know not how and it was not poffible to drive her out. The more I ftruggled to get rid of her, the more she engroffed my thoughts, and ho other

image

Her obstinacy in keeping thus possession of my my mind, made me at last quite angry; so that I stood hastily upon my legs, took to my heels, and ran back to the penta, at which my calesteros soon arrived.

Re-entering the venta, I recollected the plant of thyme I had in my pocket; and taking it out, and wrapping it up in a white paper, wrote these words upon it by way of

ed the little thing A and Monteners answer-

On the 20th of October, 1760, of to In This plant of thyme was plucked up on the fumnit of a barren bill in the kingdom of Aragon, not far from the Venta de San Martin, by a Pfoudo-botanist dofo Turin, with an intention to make a present of it to the arch-botanist Joun Mansun, in pro-

gni I do not doubt but my friend Marfili will be pleased with my present, and give it a place in his bortus fictus, as a thicker plant of thyme I am pretty fure never grew in his garden. I hope he will give me a couple of pine-apples in return, and think it a bargain.

Having written my inscription, I saw Don Diego handing his lady down the stairs, preceded by a woman with his little daughter, a very pretty girl about six years old.

What is your name, my fweet angel, faid I.

My name is Pepina Martinez, answered the little thing, and dropped me one of her best curtesies.

You are so pretty, said I, that, I must give you a kiss, if you please: and listing her up in my arms, carried her to the coach that waited, and placed her in it. Don Diego and his lady thanked me for it, got into the coach, the postillions trotted away, and I went to sleep an hour, while 'my mules were refreshing.

will be pleafed with my prefent, and

ing, and my calciferos eat their dinner

Arone in the afternoon I got into the chaire, and went on. During a league the defart continued; but going down a woody hill, the aspect of the country changed quite for the better. About two leagues from the venta we croffed the village of Carinena, stopping only a few minutes to fill our borracho with a wine called garnache, which is the very best I have as yet drank in Spain. The Cape of Good Hope has scarcely any better. I wonder Carianena's is fo little known in the world : but the small territory that produces it, is too far inland; fo that it is drank by the inhabitants and by the happy callefferos, muleteers, and few travellers that happen to pass thither.

this Longares, and luckily happened to alight at the same posada where Don Diego Martinez, had put up. He spy'd me from the window as I alighted, came down to me, was glad to fee me again, and rejoiced to hear I was going to Barcelona. We shall, said he, go a part of the way together, to the great joy of Pepina, who cannot cease talking of the notice you took of her. See, said I to myself, see what it is to be pleased with soul!

Don Diego told me, that he was for Cervera, a town in Catalonia, the king having made him corregidor there. While thus talking we faw a procession pass in the fireet, followed it, joined with them to fing Paters and Aves, and entered the As I advanced to church with them. the bason in order to give holy water to the corregidor, a clown that stood by, dipping his fingers into the water, fprinkled with a fillip some of it, first in one of my eyes, then in the other. An odd ceremony, thought I, and not unlike that of the Irish porters in London, who when the mass is over, throw the holy holy water by handfulls on the company; and stain your cloaths when it happens to be foul.

The litanies and benediction being ended, Don Diego and I came out of the church, took a ramble about the town; then returned to the Posada, where he insisted upon my sharing his supper with himself and his lady. She is a grave matron about forty, and has been a Camarifa to our dutchess of Savoy. Pepina had just been put to bed before we came in. We talked of the Duquesa Insanta during supper, and parted company about eleven, they to their bed, and I to my quilled.

approaching a flock of theep.

Walking out of Large with another ing or break or us. I mot with another fuch flock, and piretently entered into discourse will, one of the shepherd that think, as the direction of their journey was just opposite to mine. I had only was just opposite to mine. I had only time.

holy water by handfulls on the company, and than the transfer of the pensite

Sheep-walks in Spain. A vulgar error in Piedmont about mutton: Don Diego's manner of travelling. Simplicity of the few inhabitants at Maria. A new acquaintance from Siguenza. A monarch's fupposed schemes. Idleness of peopl's hopes under a new reign. A gate missed. Two cathedrals in a town. The ugly adventures of Antonio Perez. Observations on imperfect rhyming.

. deppe Bo mitogais d company about eleven,

Told you the reason that checked my curiosity, and kept me yesterday from approaching a flock of sheep.

Walking out of Longares this morning by break of day, I met with another such slock, and presently entered into discourse with one of the shepherds that tended it, but could not learn much of him, as the direction of their journey was just opposite to mine. I had only time time to be told, that " they are upon their march from the hilly country round Lérida in Catalonia to the tr plains of Andalusia, where they are to winter. That they go this long jour-" ney backwards and forwards every " year, at the rate of two, three, and " even four leagues a day, both men " and sheep lying every night in the open air, except the weather is very " bad; for in that case the men will form to themselves a hut of branches, " if there are any at hand. That, were the fheep to be kept constantly at home, " and under shelter every night, as it is " the case with those they call ovejas " caféras (home-bred sheep,) their wool " would grow coarfe, and the flocks " endangered by the rot, which is only " avoided by frequent change of cli-" mate, and keeping in the open air." " That the sheep in Aragon and Anda-" lufia, one with another, will com-" monly fell to the butcher for about " twenty

"twenty-four reals a-piece, and that the fleerings of three sheep, when sound and full grown, do generally yield and arraba of wool; that is, five and twenty pounds weight, before it is cleaned, which diminishes by half when purified and rendered fit for fale. That sheep will seed on nothing but tender grass, and never touch rosemary, thyme, sage, lavender, and other such plants, except when hardly pressed by hunger; but that they would soon perish, were they to live but three or four days upon such an improper food."

This last article being true, as I believe it is, the contrary opinion that prevails universally amongst us, with regard to the sheep in Savoy and Switzerland, becomes a mere vulgar error. You know that we attribute in Piedmont the good slavour of the Savoyard and Swiss mutton to the sheep feeding upon odoriferous plants; but the sheep in those countries
Vol. III. R cannot

of Spain, and feed upon what is loathed by the Spanish sheep.

The beauty of those animals is really greater here than either in our country or in England. I mean with regard to their sleece, which in Spain shines with a suffre scarcely inferior to that of silk. But here the sheep are not so large as in England, nor is their wool so long and bushy.

Like all men that have read much poetry in the prime of age, I have once entertained very high notions of pattoral happiness; nor have I forgot the time when I was tempted to run away from home, and go to turn shepherd in the Alps. Those notions, indeed, have now been long effaced: yet I think I could willingly take a trip to Andalusia with the shepherds of to-day, was it not for that ugly circumstance of lying in an open field at night, and seldom under shelter. A twelvementh of such a life would otherwise prove pleasing enough in my opinion, and afford very entertaining subjects for many letters, as numberless curious observations might be the fruit of fuch a peregrination.

Not being willing to go backwards to Longaros with those shepherds, for the fake of further information, I bid them a good journey, and continued my lonely walk. Don Diego's coach foon overtook me, as his calesferos, or postillions, call them as you lift, drove at a good rate. He cried to them to stop, and would have me get in with him, which I begged leave to refuse, as he was already sufficiently crouded with his lady, child, and two fervants. I wanted then to inspect the country at leifure, besides that the exercise of walking keeps up my spirits bravely, and proves no less delightful than falutary, veb of to slowly aft adt

Don Diego's way of travelling feems more judicious than mine. He has agreed with his calesseros, that they shall go the usual journeys, which seldom exceed eight leagues; but that they shall trot, inflead of pacing it, as my calefferos do. By this contrivance he fets out much later in the morning, and reaches the Poladas at noon and at night much earlier than I. Had I been apprifed that this was practicable, I would have made the fame bargain with my calesteros; nor would this have intera fered much with my morning and after? noon walks, as I could ftill have got into my chaife as foon as overtaken by the wotting mules, and avoid the languor of going a flow pace when that is the cafe. Thus I should have the advantage of more time, at night especially, to inspect the towns and villages where we put up, and by rambling about them an hour or two longer than I can do at present make possibly some observation worth telling. But complete information of whatever kind is feldom obtained at once, nor can I now rectify the error Inhavencommitted through ignorance, and nzua

R '2 exceed

however is tolerably well performed as it is an entire and an entire an entire and an entire an entire and an entire an entire and an entire and an entire and an entire and an entire a

I dined this day at Maria. Don Diego and family arrived there near two hours before me. Maria is a village of about twenty houses. It belongs to Count de Ruences, who has fucceeded my friend D'Abrea as minister to the British court. The Posadero could scarcely believe his eves when I showed him the name of his lord in my paffport, and took me for a great man, that could flow a large Theer of paper figned by his lord's own hand You would have been diverted at the notions the simple folks have at Maria of the great people at court They border much upon that of the good old woman, mentioned by our poet Berni; who fancied that the pope was either a dragon, a mountain, or a cantion of mateven kind is teldom obtained

With Don Diego at the Polada I found an necclefiastick who comes from Sigulbus.

R 3 enza

enza on mule-back. The urbanity of the Corregidor extended to him as well as me, forcing us both to partake of a dinner prepared by his cook. I was not displeased with the addition of our new companion, who proved of a cheafful disposition, and a nimble talker, as indeed almost all Spaniards are ships Reberencia (this is our mode of address to him) is a canon of the cathedral at Siguenza. In consequence of a quarrel, that he and his brethren have had with their bishop, he has been forced to quit that town with them by an order of the court. When they will be recalled is tincertain. Mean while our canon is going to pals a few months at Barcelona with a brother, who has fome military command there. I fhall therefore have a companion to far as that town, having already agreed with him, that his fervant, who follows him on foot, fiall ride on his mule, and he with me in the chaile. We did to this afternoon, and it was

was not unlucky for him to have met with one who has a place to spare in a vehicle, as the weather proved uncommonly hot. Ever since I quitted Alcolea, the sun grew warmer and warmer, and had the canon been obliged to ride his beast, it would not have been very agreeable, considering that he is very fat.

of I shall not entertain you with the jollity of our dinner and the repartees of little Pepino to her Cortejo. We left Maria at two, and reached this town before five, the distance being but two leagues. The ganon, amongst other things, informed me of the measures that the king is faid to be going to take, that he may put his kingdom in good order. The exportation of wool is foon to be prohibited; though not from the whole kingdom, because that is not yet practicable; but only from Old Castile, where manufactories are to be fet up at the royal expence. The great roads are to mended in many places; new Ventas and Posadas R 4 was Poladas built along them with all forts of conveniencies, and foreigners invited to come over to keep them. Foreigners likewise are to be allured to settle in Sierra Morena; that is, in the mountains between Madrid and Cadiz, where whole * villages and towns are to be built for their reception. It feems that thele mountains, for a confiderable tract, have been without inhabitants ever fincenthe expulsion of the Morisco's. The king is the fole proprietor of them, and that property he is to share amongst the settlers that he is to invite from abroad, befides building houses for them, and furnilhing them with conveniencies for agriculture. All fciences, continues the canon, are greatly to be cultivated, and arts to flourish vigorously under the powerful patronage of our new monarch. this monaichn orbich?

(3011)

Something of this has been done from after the date of this latter, and some hundreds of houses built in these mountains; but the foreign settlers are as yet very few.

Such are the hopes that the new reign has kindled in the breafts of the Spa niards, and I wish they may not be frustrated. But every new reign in every country commonly raises expectations much greater than the nature of men and things will admit. I am therefore afraid that those of the Spaniards are of this caft, especially as their country has been equally drained of men and money by their late war in Italy, and too large a treatury will be wanting in my opinion to carry fuch mighty schemes into execution. An economical management of the public revenue, fome regulations about the observance of lent and fastdays, some restraint on the encrease of friars and nuns, and other fuch dispositions talked of at Madrid, might possibly be conducive towards a recovery of this monarchy, which a long continuance of bad government has brought below its natural mark. But what is easy in speculation, may not prove so in prac-Such tice,

Ities and changes are not to be quickly brought about ... Great works and new enterprises require a strong spirit of perfoverance mor is it in the power of kings to inspire their ministers and agents with that virtue, let us suppose them ever so much possessed with it themselves, However, I am too ignorant of what is transacting in the councils at Madrido to venture upon prognoftics li am pleafed with the fanguine confidence of my new sacquaintance the canon and, were Isa Spaniard. I would endeavour to adopt it because the dreams of hope are the and freeples, amont lla to gnilesiq form The approaches to this town of Zaragozza are extremely fine, particularly at this time when all the pealants, both male and female, are buly about their vintage. "The nichness of their vineyards is fcarcely to be conceived. I never faw fuch an abundance of plump grapes fo beautifully coloured. You know that the vintage-feafon is the most merry time with with our country-people; nor is it a fad one with the Aragonian rufticks, by the Hille of it that I have feen to day Both men and women feemed inflamed with joy at the fight of their overloaded vines, and they fungland capered as they went along with full baskets upon their heads. -la Wanting wto inspect the scene better, I quitted the chaife, got on the canon's mate, and withfully cast my eyes before and Yound me. Indeed I do not recolleet any of our towns that prefents a better appearance, or a more enchanting territory than Zaragozzani Its eupolas and steeples, the vineyards and numberfels trees on every fide, the plain bordered by mountains, regether with the brightest sky that it is possible to ima-"gine, formed a landscape well deserving the pencil of a Claude Lorrain. Spanie

Having enjoyed this prospect a few minutes, I trotted towards some soldiers who were exercising on my left hand, and soon found myself at one of the citydity-gates. There I stopped to wait for my calefferos, and wondered at their tardiness, as I expected they would be there foon after me. But having waited in wain a full hour, looking at the evol lutions of a battalion, and growing impatient at their not coming, I entered the gate, and enquired after the Posada dedi Pillar, at which I knew they would put up. A young drummer, whom I foor found to be an Italian, offered to flidw me the way, and the offer was accepted; Alighting at the Pofada, I found to my! no small furprise that my people had reached it an hour before, perfectly at a loss how to account for my not being there Wer enquired after you at the city-gate, faid Batiste, but the custommen affured us that they had feen no fuch person go by. And, faid I, I have waited a long hour by the fide of that gate, and watched it; but faw no chaife go in. How can this be? How did this placed, is very large, and or a friendish Gentlemen, archiGentlemen, faid my countryman the drummer, I know very well how to account for this; and he explained the riddle immediately by telling the name of the gate at which I entered. I had overlooked the righest, and went to the left instead of going to the right. You may well think that my blunder made the by standers laugh, and that the laughers were not on my side.

riana, and embraced my little Correjo, Don Diego and I went to fee the Nucfird Senera del Pillar, that has been the great object of my als-driver's peregrination from the mountains of Burgos.

This Nueftra Senora is an image of wood, and is called del Pillar, because it stands on a marble pillar lodged in a dark subterranean chapel, where it is not to be looked at, but through a hole that has been made on purpose in the wall.

placed, is very large, and of a majestice

architectures but grants, a better floor, as that which it has at profest, is composed of mouldering bricks, which render it very dufty. The church contains fome fpacious chapels, in which there are altars nobly ornamented, especially with pictures. In the middle of the church they are actually building a kind of a dome supported by columns of red marble, which is found in the quarries of Tortofa. That marble looks as fine as porphyry, and as Tortofa ftands by the feafide at the mouth of the river Ebres I syonder it is not exported to foreign countries, and more generally known than it is. The columns of the dome have their capitals and pedeftals of gilt brafa. The image and pillar are to be removed under the dome when quite finished, and there placed on an altar, the fore part of which is to be a maffy plates of filver of fix hundred pounds weight, if this is not a Spanish exagchristians during the circle of thaotarag Zaragozza

Monifoos

as Baragozzads perhaps the only rowle in chartendom that has two darkedrals. This church of Nueftra Senora is one, and called the new cathedral of the old Is an antique edifice, a minute deferigi tion of which would take up a volume, To many are the fingular things that it tontains. I will only mention a wooden chieffx, whole nails grow once a year. ToT what purpose the crucifix performs this miracle, I know not. What need has it of nails ? Perhaps the parings of them were formerly disposed as relicks among the devout. At prefent they are not? therefore the miracle is performed the no purpose in a lead of the second hately fix months in one church, and fix in the other. The common people here affirm that the old cathedral was built by the Morifcos, and ferved them as chief mosque. But some antiquarians, say the contrary, and that it was a work of the christians during the reign of those same Morifcos.

Morifcos, who parmitted them a free exercise of their religion in many parts of Spain, and especially in Aragon. Had the Spaniards imitated their example when they got the better of them, their country would in all probability have been more populous: But whether it would have enjoyed the intestine peace that was procured by their expulsion, is another question.

As to the image and pillar, the Aragohians are positive, that they were both sent down from heaven at the time the apostle San Yago (St. James) was on his mission in this part of the world. That the image then spake to the apostle, and encouraged him to preach the gospel to the Spaniards who were then heathens, with a promise that she would never be removed from Zaragozza as long as the world lasted, and would be the constant protectress of the Spanish kingdom in general, and of Aragon in particular.
Whether

Collinativi,

Whether St. James was ever in Spain, is a point that I should not care to start or contradict on this side the Pireneans. I have read somewhere that a learned Frenchman called Godeau (and bishop of Vence, if I am not mistaken) wrote a book on purpose to prove that St. James never was in Spain. No Spanish bishop would dare to do as much in any part of this country, though in all probability they are all persuaded that Godeau was right. St. James's body rests at Compostella in Galicia, and the sanctuary there is the second in the Roman Catholick world. The first, you know, is our Loretto.

The devotion of the Aragonians to their Nuestra Seonra, is so great, that it has made them almost forget another patron they have had during many ages. I mean the warlike St. George, that was also revered in former times by the English as protector of their island.

Vol. III.

mi As I am going to morrow, I cannot tell you any particularity of other pub-The of private buildings to be feen here, which are numerous enough, and fome of them deferving notice. Much lefs can I speak of the manners and customs of this people, mark their peculianities, and point out their deviations from these of the people at Madrid, or in other parts of Spain. To enter into fuch details would require a residence of some months. I can only tell you in general, athat fome parts of Zaragozza are very well built; that feveral of its ffreets are ftraight, long, and spacious, especially one called el Coffo, where the nobility and gentry refort in their coaches on fine evenings to take the air, one coach flowly following the other up and down the freet in a procession, as is done on the Efplanade at Turin.

They say that the number of athese inhabitants amounts to little less than lixty thousand. The town is seated on the

the Ebro, the most considerable river in Spain, which has two bridges here, one of stone, the other of brick, both very well built. By means of the boats on the Ebno, Zaragozza has an eafy commumication with the Mediterranean, which is not forty leagues off. The town of courfe carries on fome fort of trade, No atown in this kingdom, except Madrid, abounds to much in nobility and rich people, of whom about four hundred tkeep their coaches as I am told. Yet lamongst this nobility there are but few grandees, as they chuse to reside at Madrid fo long as their incomes will permit bthem to make a figure there.

quered from the Morisco's by its own inhabitants, and cleared of those Mahometans before any other of the Spanish provinces. And as no prince in Christendom laid then any claim to it, or, if many did, it was disregarded, the Aramgonians chose themselves a king; as many of the Spanish S 2 legends legends and romances inform us, rather than history, the events of those times being very much involved in obscurity. Instead however of making a noble prefent of their kingdom to the man whom they first raised to their throne, the Aragonians imposed such conditions upon him, that made it fearce worth acceptant ing. One of those conditions was that his authority should be controled by a magistrate called El Justicia, whose power was in effect much greater than; the royal. On the accession of every king to the crown, the Justicia came, to fpeak these words to his mock-majesty? Nos que valemos tanto como vos, os bazeno mos muestro rey y senor, con tal que guardeis nueferos fueros y libertades : fi no, no. That "We who are as good as you, chuse "you for our king and lord, on condi-"tion that you protect our laws and " liberties. If not, we chuse you not," Let the conditions be ever fo hard few private men will have constancy to refuse when refule a kingdom : but fuch a compliment was too ludicrous and infulting to be long fuffered by him who was raifed to the highest station, or at least by his successors. Muchos, fays Quevedo with great acuteness of observation, Muchos tienen pacientia para fer bumildes, mientras no tienen poder para fer fobervios. " Many will have the patience to show humulity during their inability to show where pride." This was the cale with the Kings of Aragon, and would have been the cafe with any body elfe. They put up with that difgraceful form of installation while they were weak, and protected the fueros y libertades. But how could they cordially do what reflected dishonour upon them, what rendered them contemptible in the eyes of all other fovereigns, and what exposed them to the laughter of their subjects in the act of afcending the throne? Little was the acquaintance of the ancient Aragonians with human nature, refule when when they flattered thenselves that their kings would not thow as much pride as therifelves whenever they had power. Accordingly as foon as the kings of Aragon became ffrong enough for the purpose, they forced their fubjects to forbear their irreverential coronation-speech, and rendered the will of the Justicia Subservicint to their own. For fome time however, that magistrate continued to have great authority, because great powers are mot annihilated in hafte; and that authority stood for feveral ages in the way of the king's. But king Philip II. deftroyed it totally at one blow upon the following. proising the death and a series in the series of the serie

Philip, who was one of the problett and most cruel men that ever disgraced human nature, had a secretary of state called Antonio Perez. This Perez was ordered by Philip to put secretly to death a troublesome agent of his bastand brother Don John of Austrian Perez could not help obeying his master's order, and accord-hired ruffians in the fireets of Madrid.

The atrocious deed being done, the relations of the agent, who discovered the perpetrator of it, perfecuted Perez before the ordinary tribunals of justice. Perez found himself in a strange dilemma, as the king on one hand had strictly forbidden him ever to reveal that he had actual by his order, while on the other his majesty did not chuse to stop the prosecution, though he could have done it with a single word.

chardships that Perez underwent during a trial that lasted several years. He was thrown into prison, had his goods confiscated, and his arms dislocated by the rack; nor did the king ever take notice of his sufferings. He often expostulated by letters with the king, had recourse to his majesty's confessor to prevail on his insernal heart to take pity of his torments, and free him from his persecutors;

torre deutrall sid, vaimple Afternilmany yehre offin prisonment and tomore, Perm found internsite runo laway from his jail, and went to Zaragozza, where the Jus sibragil well acquainted with his withole flory took birn under his protection. The people of Zaragozza, who knews well as the Jufficia, that Renes had afted by the king's express orden in the defiafifination of Don John's agent, wapproved of the protection granted him by their chief magistrate, and generously resolved to fland by him at all devents refolutions of the Aragonians example ated the proud monarch, who feemed to delight in Perez's fufferings; and nodobger diffembling what the whole world knew, the black transaction about the murdered agent, Philip resolved the death both of Rerez and the Justicia, together with the annihilation of all the ancient privileges enjoyed by what he called his rebellions Subjects. by Unluckily he shad ftrength menough to bring his barbarous feberne rybich imme-immediately about . He fent an army into Aragon too ftrong to be relifted by al populace tumultuoully affembled. The army presently mastered Zaragozza, and the Justicia fell into the king's hands, who had him executed an hour after he was taken without the least form of processed together with a confiderable number of the people's ringleaders in ba/Thus was an end put to the power of that magistrate, and thus were the Aragonians stripped of their laws and liber -. ties. They have now been I near two contucies quite as fubmissive to their kings as the rest of the Spanish Subjects, and time that obliterates all things, has at length utterly destroyed even the remembrance of their fueros y libertades. As to Perez, he had the good fortune, during the confusion caused by Philip's army when it entered Zaragozza, to make his escape into France, where he passed the remainder of his wretched life. In France he published some books, from Smenin which which the whole of that sorrelarantee gin ning be collected to of those books. which had an prefere become very feares. I have some in mys polletions in the CARTAS That is, Lettres) de Amonio Pirez printed at Paris without a date, and I have read it duoigh. The man complains in feveral of those letters of Philip's unparalleled barbaring both to him and to his innocents family. That was thrown into prison after his escape from Spain, a god fix years old nor excepted The memory of that king cannot be fet in a more detestable light wBut woe to poor Perez, if the brave king Henry IV. had not taken him under his protection, and thus fereened him from the wanton and unaccountable cruelty of his bloodthirfly malter ! and harry of 2A.

I have now wandered enough from my subject, and return to this day's story. Having visited the two cathedrals, Don Diego and I returned to the posada, where we found that Dona Mariana

Mariana had fome blind beggars called up to fing and fiddle for the entertain ment of little Pepina Give me leave to regale you with a bit of the fimple poetry of the eyeless bards of Zaragozza: वामान्यानिक वर्षा स्वाचित्रकारिक व्याची व्याची विकास विस्ति ह nem ad I Dican los Espanoles well & Ones lo zun Contgrande anbelo no Vie zun ferrent ordioVivarnueftro monorca par acol adv seds : Carlos Tencerasial intoda tion and oqual in obligation falva, mirando on the week - zanio Ques Carlos Alegario sommina month -mas gradespices los clarines T. Viengens tulle de fer de le fenancie de la se et se et muceful problem alexagogaza Legaye king affected AV shad nooranteluninane Dates his montani Andordice i que voiva a quo montante to ythe Carlos Tencero and him connew alto. ont said El discretarin pradente, on de ins mont i Salion y raffable, of wold word it it s'vab allen quanto a piadoso statul one with the Hijor de i modre with month of the also theats on the aid its campad to the lladiday where succidendo that stone cuMariana

I shall not endeavour to make you sensible of the chife, as the Spaniards call it, or the facetious ecutaness contained in the last of these lines. Let poetry be dull or witty, it is equally impossible to translate it in such a manner as to preferve either the wit or the dul-I Nor will I attempt to point ness of it. you out the difference between the lantin guage of these stanzas [which is the vulgar Aragonian] and the true Castilian. That difference is too finall to deferve an analysis. I will only make you obferve again, that this manner of rhym-A ing fuch words as anbelo, llega, and 9 affable, with tercero, fena, and madre, A would prove insupportable to an Italian ? ear, was it introduced in our language. as we have long been used, like the French, to the strictest resemblance of Que culpa tence to significant ni bruo?

Yet this imperfect confonance used by T the Spaniards in their songs, appears still I less strange and uncouth to my unaccustomed customed ear, than that which I find often in their dramas, of a fimilarity of found in the last cadence of every other line, during a confiderable number of lines. What I mean, will be better explained by the following example, which I transcribe out of a comedy of Calderon, infifted El Escondido y la Tapada. A malter and a fervant talk thus together in the first fcone. and first a charles vulgar Arabonian bakarahe true Castilian.

I 2009]

That the transfer to deferve -dyo, aunque el martirologio Romano aqui me traxeran Para que escogiera muerte A mi propofito, fuera in aller Sins agradarme ninguine bull 2 vord bluow Varishmas diligentia, vince until samifica Porque no ay tan bien prendida Muerte que bien me parezca. Que culpa tengo vo de que Tu a morir contento vengas Para tracrine de arreata i 1111-15 16 16 17 less flavors and answer to my anacking eufformed ic.

MASTER.

theferm Reple arrawn to foreign pe eliPues, dime tu, que rezelasa soitifailus Si tu en nada eltas culpadogn vicinatas Ni te hallafte en la pendencia ? 20 11990 it of ythinservant to await reclical Pues, fi un triunfo matador (101) Arrastra los que encuentra, Un ama matador, dime, wolleth warm No arraftrará (cofa es cierta) Qualquiera triunfo criado? Rime of Italy. . NATEAM Continue ing flate nature was maine me supol iv of her bon signification of the least and the mi Y esto a una parte, fenor, onsmos Tan cerrado tu capricho, noquequimien Que, ya que me traes, no separa de A que me traes? Dime pues Que es lo que en Madrid intentas ? allecte meter the fire bare garions were these. People not used to foreign peculiarities are often apt to fall with little ceremony upon whatever they have not been accustomed to. Thus many an Italian have I heard flupidly to ridicule the French Alexandrines, and the decafyllable couplets of the English. Thus do many shallow critics of France and England find fault both with those same Alexandrines of France and the Ottava Rima of Italy, without confidering that nature was in every country the teacher of the first poets and verse-makers, and pointed them out the fittest metres in their respective languages. Indeed I do not recollect any Italian, French, or English, that ever entered into any criticism with regard to the Spanish versification, probably because few amongst the learned of the three nations were ever studious of the Spanish language. Had any of them ever turned his attention that way, many an abfurd judgment would possibly have been given upon this subject. thefe.

With this fort of rhyming, both interlocutors go on to the end of the scene, which consists of no less than two hundred verses, all alternately sounding like these.

Tubject, as the fame manner of rhyming is not to be found in England, France, or Italy. But, though I own that to me fuch a long continuance of affonancies as that mentioned above, is far from proving delightful, yet I take it for granted that it is intrinsically to with regard to the natives of this country, fince their poets fearch studioully after such assonancies, and featter them often in the feenes of their dramas. My dislike to them, proves nothing elfe in my opinion, but that I am as yet far from having caught the true, that is, the natural harmony of this language, though in the judgment of fome I might pass for a great adept in Spanish, as I am able to explain the meaning of as many Spanish words as most Spaniards.

Let me now make an end of this letter without any further digressions. I told you above, that the grapes produced in the neighbourhood of this town, are very fine to the fight. I tell you now that that they are also delicious to the taste but the wine they yield, is rather too rich and luscious for the purpose of common drinking. I have a notion that this people do not well understand the art of making wine, and that they let their grapes ripen too much, which is the cause, as I take it, of that over lusciousness and oiliness of their wines. A couple of glaffes of the best, have fatiated me more, than half a dozen of fome French and Piedmontele wine would have done. In the second secon

Zaragozza is a corruption of Casaria Augusta. The change of Cafarea into Zara is not peculiar to Spain. The town of Zara in Dalmatia, was likewife called Cafarea by the Romans. Strattered from ד בי ומה מסיר שבלה זה רובר סוף ויונה לבוונית that I employed indensity and tupolities you show that she wanted the profit too the hete throughout 1984 this towing are went too the state of the work you now LET-Vol. III. T

Befides that an steam which we call in various particular train furly as that of Ugliness miraculous, with a guess at the reason of it. Particoloured tiles. Slow travelling advantageous. Churches land other buildings at Zaragozza. Richards representing martyrs. Spanish and Piosedmontese lawyers not to be admirable Painted statues. The idle and the painted sequally resort to noted sanstuarias. It also country-lass kissed by surprise. Blank otherses and associates, Economical Blank structs and associates.

that they are all beach, or of a brick than an observation, when I tell you that of all the miraculous Madonas, or Nucstras Senoras [as the Spaniards term them] to be seen in various parts of the Roman Catholick world, there is perhaps not one that has been painted or capved with a handsome face.

Besides

Befides that in Turin, which we call La Confolata, I have feen feveral other in various parts of Italy, fuch as that of Mondevi, that of San Celfo at Milan, that of Caravaggio, two or three in Venice, and above all that most renowned of Loretto. I have taken particular notice of each; and indeed there is not one in the number, but what would difgrace the most pitiful amongst our modern painters both in point of drawing and colouring. They all have either a distorted nose, or a mouth too large, or a disproportionate chin, or fome other fuch defect, befides that they are all black, or of a brick colour. That of Zaragozza is no better than the rest, as I could see, though I looked at it through a hole, and by the dim light of a lamp hung before it. Yet the Spaniards will have it, that it was made by the angels, or as our Italians pretend that the greatest part of theirs were the work of St. Luke. 1911 and

Tigottan antiv baywe

We must not however wonder at the barbarity of the pencils or chizzels that formed them, because they were the shapeless productions of unpolished ages. What I wonder at is, that of the many beautiful ones painted by Raphael, Guido, Caracci, Titian, Sassoferrate, Maratti, and numberless other good painters, there is not one, to which the power of working miracles was ever attributed. No, not even the Pieta by the greatest artist that ever Italy admired, could cure the least fever, or relieve the smallest tooth-ache of the most devout woman in Rome.

Discoursing upon this subject with my new friend the Canon, and making him observe this want of power in the best painted madonas, and searching after some plausible reason for such a strange phenomenon, we could not find a better, than that his Murillos and Velasquez, as well as our Michelangelos and Raphaels, when they painted or carved any, were which inflamed the simple artists of the ignorant ages, but gave way to the vanity of showing their superior skill in their art; and thus it happens (added the Canon) that those amongst our facred orators, who court admiration by an over-niceness of language and rapidity of cloquence, seldom or never perform a conversion, whereas the plain preacher, who has no other view than that of driving sin out of the world, generally awakes contrition in the best part of his audience.

I forgot to tell you yesterday, that the outside of the new cathedral's five cupolas, are formed of concave and convextiles alternately placed, some coloured red, some blue, some green, and some yellow, like Harlequin's dress. Yet the regularity of such a disposition makes those cupolas look very pretty at a distance. Let us now come to the story of this day.

We

10/WO

ed We went yesterday but fix leagues, and to-day only five. This you will think tedious travelling, but I am not intirely of this opinion. Since I am about it, I dislike not the opportunity of inspecting at leisure the country I am croffing. Thus I can make observations that would otherwise escape, were I to hasten onwards with greater speed: though a slow passage through places in which there is nothing particular to be feen, fometimes gives difgust. For this reason I was not displeased last night, when my calefferos begged I would indulge them to fet out to-day at noon instead of seven in the morning. I took advantage of the intermediate hours to run about Zaragozza, and look at the s churches and other large edifices.

Whoever goes through that town, ought to see the church of St. Laurence, and its chief altar. Not far from it, there is that of St. Peter Velasquez, and which, they say, is the richest in the town, town, but as it was fhut, I could not fee That of the Jesuits is small, but the infide of it is entirely gilt over, which has a most surprising effect. The cloyfters of it are decorated with large portraits of all those Jesuits who have been cardinals or faints, and with many other of great lords and ladies that were benefactors to the Loyolan order.

Next the Jesuits church there is an hospital that goes by the appellation of bely. It receives above feven hundred fick of both fexes. The church that belongs to it, though confiderably large, is very dark, owing to the lowners of its ceiling, which a tall man might almost touch by raising up his hand. I never saw a more disproportionate building, but that disproportion is not totally without awfulness. They fay it was a work of the Morifcos.

The church of the Franciscans is also worth feeing, especially its great altar, and a small chapel behind it, formed of entribich they TOWIL.

the most curious marbles that are to be found in Spain. In the vaft cloyfters that are annexed to the church, instead of portraits of lords and ladies, fuch as in that of the Jesuits, there are historical pictures a fresco, that represent fome of the many Franciscans who suffered martyrdom in various parts of the The feveral artists that have world. been employed in that work, feen to have ranfacked their imaginations to invent exquisite tortures for the poor friars, of whom fome are exhibited in the act of being fawed alive, or dragged along on uneven fromes by horfes and bulls, or trampled upon by elephants, or tranffixed by iron-spits and roasted over a large fire by heathers, who grin through their bushy wiskers, besides many that have their arms and legs cut off, or are fimply hanged or beheaded.

St. Gaetano's church contains likewise many things that are worth seeing. It belongs to a modern order called of the pious febools, and the friars there enjoy the privilege of teaching the Latin grammar to boys; which privilege was by the good friars lately wrested from the Jesuits, after a very long and strenuous contest.

lawi

pious

The palace of the archbishop lies on the right bank of the Ebro at equal distance from the two bridges. Its external appearance is but indifferent, but I am told that some of its apartments are as grand as the grandest in Madrid. I had not time to see them.

The Audencia, that is, the chief court of Judicature, is also a clumsy building when inspected from without. The Canon tells me, that the numerous lawyers who get their livelihood out of it, are full as able as those of Madrid to puzzle a cause and sleece their clients. It seems that in Spain as well as in Italy, the professors of the law make it a point, amongst other things, to speak and write a most barbarous jargon of their own, which they pompously call the language of law.

law. Diou may read our Gervantes and Gulderons for ever, fays the Canon ; but you will never get fufficient Spanish to understand our advocates when holding forth in our Audiencias, in civil as well as in criminal matters. A man wins or lofes his fuit, is acquitted or hanged, without having understood a word of what has been urged for or against him. Our men of fense and learning consider our lawyers as the chief and incessant corrupters both of our language and of our eloquence, as each feems to frive to outdo the rest of his fraternity in quaintness of conceits and barbarity of phraseclogy We have long exclaimed against the abfurdity of fuch a practice, and our kings have iffued many ordinances to abolish it; but to no effect. The Picapleytes (Pettifoggers) still go on in the old way, making a horrible hodge podge of ancient and modern Spanish, of French, Latin, Greek, and Arabick I do not caricature, continues the Canon. They met

They fay, that our new monarch has taken this ugly practice into confideration, and is absolutely resolved upon forcing the lawyers to speak plain Castilian in spight of themselves; but this is not to be brought about in my opinion, if he does not aborcar la mitad d'ellos (bang one balf of them;) that is, of the transgressors of his future orders in this particular. The abuse is so universal, and has taken such a deep root, that I think it past all remedity but a such a suc

What the Canon says of the Spanish lawyers, we can likewise say of the Italian in general, and of our Piedmontese in particular. I understand my native dialect as well as any of them, and am not ignorant of the other languages our lawyers mix with it at the bar; but never could I clearly make out a whole period in any of their speeches; such is the lart with which they contrive their medley; besides that many of their words are quite arbitrary, and not to be met with in any dictionary, lexicons of gloffary. It is a great shame that they are suffered to go on, and that they are not compelled to fpeak in fuch a manner as to be understood by the generality of their hearers. How different the lawyers of Paris and London ! I have heard many in both cities express themselves with a purity and elegance, that would do honour to the best writers; and many are the printed Plaidovers of the French advocates, that might be given for models of elecution as well as of just reafoning. Indeed, we Piedmontefe, together with the Spaniards fif my Canon speaks truth, as I think he does] are at leaft two hundred years behind the French and the English in this respect. But let me finish my hasty tour through Zaragozza. despe abrolued della met poqui remarkable not for the beauty of its architecture, but for its bulk, and still more for its gate overloaded with whim-

fical

fical and fenfeless ornaments. On each fide of it there is a gigantick statue, both ill-carved and painted in natural colours, that the giants may appear still more disagreeable to the fight, than they otherwise would if the stone had been lest plain. In Madrid as well as in Zaragozza I have observed that the taste has once prevailed of painting their statues, both the stellar and the drapery; and there is the dome of a facristy in Madrid that exhibits a vast bass-relief made in this absurd and childish taste.

In Zaragozza the common beggars are much more numerous than in Madrid. In the new cathedral especially, one meets with so many, that there is no such thing as to recite an Ave without being interrupted at every word by the importunating demands of an alms. But this is the case wherever there are sanctuaries of any note. The idle as well as the necessitous, resort in crowds to them, knowing very well that those who wist them, them, will in general be liberal to them? out of that fame pious principle that in duces them to fuch vifitations of amon About noon I camen a foot out nof Zaragozza, and enjoyed a few minutes the fine publick walks that are without its walls, all bordered with ftraightfrows of high and beautiful trees, which have not yet cast off their leaves, though the auttumn is far advanced. This may give you an idea of the fweetness of this climatel one of the very best in Spain. vm ot sloot griAbout two leagues from the stowno! met again with male and female peafants carrying home their grapes, fome on carts, some on affes and mules, and some in baskets on their heads. Amongst the number I fingled out a group of three pretty wenches, who fimiled at me, and courtefied repeatedly as I approached them, but rather in a mocking manner than otherwise. Muchachas faid I, quereis venderme un racimillo ? Girls, will you fell me a bunch of your grapes ?"

Imprapes ? Bud No, I no, maid they all sat once, we don't fell any ; but you are welcome to pick what you pleafe out of our baskets; and laid them down on the ground. I made use of their kindness; but infifted that I would frangle the youngest of them with a filk handkerchief Iohappened to have in my pocket, and throwing it fuddenly about her neck, pulled her to me, gave her a kiss on the forehead, quitted the handkerchief, and took to my heels. They laughed obstreperoully at fuch an unexpected proceeding, and called me back to take more of their nacemos; but I went on waving my hand, and crying a dies mozas, a dies muchain balkets on their heads, Amound

monly met with among the rufticks of any country, whatever our Arcadian poets may fay, who have fixed the abode of urbanity amongst the inhabitants of the fields, directly against the etymology (Suches 5.

logy of the word. I have observeding all countries, that the generality of penfants are far from deferving the character that innumerable bards have given them. I have always found that their groffness equals their ignorance, that they are Rupidly malignant and fhy, and, above all, quite tenacious, even of what they have in the greatest plenty. But vivant my courtry-lasses of La Puebla, which is the name of the village they were going to. They are an exception to the universal character of the rufticks, and I wish I was fuch a mafter of the Aragonian dialect as to be able to compose half a dozen eclogues in their commendation.

Just by La Puebla I was overtaken by my calessers, and received the compliments of the Canon upon the goodness of my legs that could carry me fo far on fo hot a day, especially after my long morning walk about the town. The more I hear him talk, the more I like him. He is as grave as becomes his character; yet he is chearful, and will attempt a joke from time to time. His health is not so good as I could wish; but though afflicted by the gravel and fome concomitant disorders, he does not whine and complain, as feeble men will perpetually do, but bears his evils with patient refignation. He feems much read in his native language, and if I can judge of what I know not, by what I know, the characters he gives to the writers of his country feem to me very just. From la Puebla to this Villafranca we talked of poetry, which in Spain he thinks as yet much below the perfection to which it might be carried. He is as great an enemy to the Affonancias as I am to blank verse, and fays, that they have been invented by idleness, quoting several authorities, which show that he is not fingular in his opinion; but the miffortune is, that feveral of their most Vol. III. popular popular poets have given their fanction to the Afforancias; so that it will never be possible to drive them out of their poems, be they ever so much degraded by so absurd a practice.

Urbanitas ab urbe. 1 1011 at 5011101

MAN TO SH

more

How far my Canon is right or wrong in these affertions, I am not in a condition to determine. If ever I return to Spain, it will possibly be in my power to know more of this matter.

Here we did not find Don Diego, who having set out this morning three full hours before us, has pushed forwards to Bujalaroz or Penalba: so that I shall not see him again until we reach Cerbera, which I hope to do within four days. I have nothing else to say, but that the country has continued delightfully fine the whole afternoon as well as the weather.

for these two centuries past, and more, endeavoured to give a bad character to every nation, except their own; nor can the inhabitants of this kingdom reason—

U 2 ably

pupulam poet di va given their lanction reven dity E Tar E Ring XIX head to he appointed to ourse them out to their Wisdom of travel-writers. Character of the Aragonians. Ambition and Interest, ankow called by the Spaniards. Dancing noai barmless pastime. People work that mean work us Sun and land nearly ufelefs wwithout water. Industry of the Bifcayans and Asturians. Why Aragon is on more fertile than New Cafile. Arrieros, und their manner of life. Variety of o pronunciations. The Canon is right in my opinion. Satyrical and bucolic poets, why not burtful, though they lye A I Small defart. The rent of a Wenta Wirtue ill-ledged. Knitting women.

country, teas committed delightfully fine

HE greatest part of travel-writers, as I have already observed, have for these two centuries past, and more, endeavoured to give a bad character to every nation, except their own: nor can the inhabitants of this kingdom reason-U 2 ably complain of not having had their full share of itinerary scurrility, as they have been honoured very often with the several appellations of idle, proud, jealous, superstitious, lustful, vindictive, and so forth.

That these, and other such noble qualities, are pretty common wherever there are men, sew people, I think, will have the considence to deny. The only point to be settled is, what proportion of goodness and wickedness there is between one and another nation, when compared together, that we may distribute proportionate portions of love and hatred to the countries which have the greater or smaller stock either of wickedness or of goodness.

But whatever rambling computers may have done, in order to affift our judgment on fuch a knotty subject, and make us rightly determine which nation is most amiable, and which is most detestable. I must humbly confess for my part, that my powers were always too gross for this kind of moral arithmetic, and that I am unable to set this ballance between any two of the few nations I have visited.

That the Spaniards, confidered in the totality, have as rich a store of wickedness as any other nation under heaven, it would be highly absurd not to suppose. Yet, should we be willing to believe my new acquaintance, the Canon of Siguenza, his countrymen the Aragonians would in a good measure be excepted out of the supposition, as he stoutly infifts that they are all very good, especially when brought into comparison with the inhabitants of other Spanish provinces.

Many are the fine things that the good man has told me to day in commendation of the Aragonians; and his affertions he has backed with fuch plaufible reasons, as my scanty knowledge of this province in particular, and of Spain in U 3 general, general will not permit me to invalidate or contradictive or contradictive

"I have taken many a ramble through our provinces (fays the Canon) and " have been many years a confessor in " feveral parts of them. Of course I " have had numberless opportunities of " forming such estimates of our peo-" ple's various characters, as cannot be formed by any class of men of a pro-" fession different from mine in much "defs by erratick foreigners, that only come like you to take a peep, and " run away. I think therefore myfelf intitled to a good share of your belief, when I tell you that the Aragonians in particular are one of the best nations you could vifit, and that the " Spaniards in general do not deferve " the harsh treatment they have met with from every ftranger who ever croffed this country with his quill in " his hand, as I fee that you are doing." makable to the good man , and thus, or nearly oted ram less a friend to travel writers. answered I, than you may perhaps imagine, and can verily affure you, that it as not my intention to tread in the footfleps of the greatest part of them. It is Itrue that I take down memorandums of every thing I see and hear, as I go on in my journey. But you may already have feen that I am not much disposed to be pervish and out of humour; therefore wou must not look upon me as a man who will revenge himself of the trifling inconveniencies he has met with in this country, at the expence of its inhabitants. Be fure, good fir, that I am much more pleafed with opportunities of speaking well than ill of any people; and as you feem to have a deal of good to fay of the Aragonians, impart it to me, and be fure that I will fome how or other have it all inserted into the account of my journey through Spain.

Such a promife was visibly most acceptable to the good man; and thus, or U 4 nearly course. seam or or and or reduces

" In Zaragozza, as in every other of " our great towns, I will freely own to " you, that wicked people are not rare; and that I have fometimes heard there " of fuch iniquities, as it is almost with-" out the power of the All-merciful to " forgive. But fetting that great town " afide, and speaking only of the pro-" vince, which is one of the largest and " best inhabited in the kingdom, I can " tell you with truth, that I fcarcely ever had any great occasion for " chiding and reprimanding my peni-" tents, as I have always feen that those " of their thoughts, which are not " taken up by the care of their unavoid-" able occupations, are chiefly engroffed " by the mass and the rosary, the pro-" cession and the benediction, and other. things of this kind. bullet too " People remarkably wicked (conti" nued the Canon) are not eafily to be roflicks

" heard

Miheard of in this, not indeed in land " other of our inland provinces. We must go to Madrid, or to our great sifea-towns, to hear of great, fingular, "and frequent acts of wickedness." The stair of the court, I fay it to my forstrow, is certainly pestilential to too to many a mor does that from the fea tivprove much better than that of the socourt: loAnd it is not difficult to traffign the reason why immorality thereigns in those places disproportion-"ably more than amongst us who are sequally removed from court and the "fea. Both at court and in the featowns, men ride in a manner on the so whirlwinds of interest and ambition: "which two passions are by our moralifts properly termed los dos cuernos mas grandes del Demonio, "the two " biggeft borns of the Devil." But in " our inland provinces, thinly scattered "with large and opulent places, the " greatest part of the inhabitants are " rusticks . heard

Mrufticks, whose time cannot otherwife be employed than in the innocent soccupations of the field and won know that those who must live by " the product of uninterrupted labour, " cannot be fo vicious as those whom court-favour or commerce dehridhes often with rapidity; which is what " agriculture will not eafily do any where, and most particularly in this " province of Aragon. To miggiv meio " Throughout this province (continued the good man) life is lived on with the greatest simplicity and "uniformity. People generally rife be-"times, and work during the day with "fcarge any intermission it nor don they affemble many together on working 4 days before it is night. But as foon "as the fun is gone, both fexes join " every where to fing and dance with a fury, that you would think them out "of their senses, if you could see them when they begin to grow hot in it; " and

Myand this practice is so general in the stream of our provinces, that was it possible for you to see the king-strain dom at one glance when day-light has indisappeared, you would see by much the greater part of its inhabitants briskly shaking their heels to the found of their guittars, castanets, and woices, old men and young children strain excepted, if they have but sufficient vigour of legs."

And do you verily take this practice to be innocent? I know that in many countries it is not reckoned quite so, and I know that there is not in Italy one preaching friar, but what declaims against it as often as he can. May be, sir, you don't know that in the countries belonging to the Pope, who is the head of your religion as well as ours, the rulers of every community, especially those chiefly consisting of peasants, have a strict charge to keep them from as carnival or streetbages show of shoop?

" I don't know (replied the Canon) "what effects may be produced amongst " the Italians by the practice of dancing." " But amongst us, daily and universal" " as it is, 'tis not at all conducive to "vice. May be your countrymen are " less religious than mine, and their " remissines in religion exposes athema " more than it does us, to the ambuffres " of the devil. Be this as it will set s " baylar es cosa buena, " dancing is a good " thing;" we fay it preverbially ; and if " it was a bad one, there are priests and " friars enough who would declaim for " powerfully against it, as to diminished " or abolish it. But long experience " has perfuaded us, that our nighthol " dances, though often a little too freelo " with regard to postures and gestures, it " ftill are the most harmless diversion !! " that our lower classes can have ; land I " really think that if they were about " " lished, "French

"fished, our people would have re"
"course to worse expedients to amuse
"their evenings; therefore neither the "ecclesiastical, nor the civil power ever
"made the least attempt towards the r
"suppression, as nations must have di"versions of some kind or other."

To crown the labours of the day (faid I) with nightly rejoicings and of the most innocent kind, as you pretend, is a mode of life so very pastoral, that I am almost tempted to think you are but repeating what you have read in pastoral romances. I am however of your opinion that the inhabitant, of the country neither have, nor can have the vices that townsmen can and will have. But, fir, are not the Aragonian rusticks full as slothful and averse to labour, as the rest of this nation, which has the reputation throughout Europe of being the most slothful and proud in the world?

"the greatest composure) that the French have long reproached us with mpilde and enmity to labour. I know that they tell each other of the Iwords our peafants wear, even when they "follow the plough; and how they ware follicitous to show them, that they " may be thought gentlemen." I know that we are laughed at for hanging even the walls of our cottages with our genealogies, and that our intallest Hidalgos think themfelves descended of ancestors full as glorious as the " king. But let Frenchmen be as witty colast they please, their abfurd affertions "do us no great harm." Tis true that even our lower classes have a good "Thare of fpirit, and are far from "thinking meanly of themselves; but "do they differ in this from other na-"tions? Are not all mankind full as "vain-glorious and proud as we? A "rare discovery indeed to have found " out that men are proud and vain-"aglorious! Did they need crofs the n at that " Pireneans 1 "True that our low people hang their walls with their pedigrees; it is not true that our peafants wear swords: and it is not true that our Hidalgos of any class think themselves as noble as the king.

as the king made adjusted adjusted adjusted a Then with regard to our pretended aversion to labour, I must tell you that all will work who can, in the fame proportion that people do in other countries. Should our people forbear work, they would foon starve, as our rivers run with no more milk " and honey than the rivers of other "countries. Do we not all live? And " is not that a proof that we work? In-" deed we do, and wherever our land is " susceptible of cultivation, our land is "cultivated. To be convinced of this, give but yourself time to bestow some "attention on our vineyards as you go " forwards through Aragon and Cata-" lonia. You will see in both provinces...

" that

Pireneans L

not that we have no need to learn of the and French the art of rearing vines. And if we know the art of cultivating the wine as well as the French, why " should we be supposed more ignorant than they, in the other art of multiplying corn? This art is very well " understood in our wheat-provinces, as you might fee, if you would go to visit Old Caffile, and feveral other parts of Spain. It is only when fum-" mers prove perfectly dry, and no min will fall during feveral months, that free we are obliged to fend out of the we kingdom for corn : otherwife we have fufficient quantities every where t nor of is it our fault when it does not rain our in the proper feafons, and when our harvelts are parched before the y come " to maturity. But due rains spread plenty throughout our corn-provinces, " and there we have farmers (in Old " Castle particularly) who are able to give, by way of portion, thousands " of

of doubloons to their daughters; nor are the Hidalgos few, whose ancient trastles are sometimes repaired by means of lucky weddings with * Don-zellas del campo.

have taken notice yourself of spacious tracts of desart land in Estremadura, Foledo, New Castile, and even in this our more fertile province. But observe, that, if those tracts he uncultivated, the fault is not to be attributed to the inhabitants. How would you have them cultivate land where there is no water? Can we form rivers and streams to moisten our desarts? Make us as powerful as the Romans of old, and thus enable us to build aqueducts twenty, thirty,

bus give by wax of porticall anovards

Hidden [a contraction of Hija'd algo, fon of someloch] means a man of noble descent; and a Donzella del campo signifies a country maiden, a rustick beau-

"and even a hundred leagues in length,
"as the Romans did when they possessed
"this country. You will then see, that "we like idleness and desarts no better "than the French.

" But fetting aside impossibilities, I " wish you had an opportunity of visit-" ing Biscay, Asturias, the kingdom of "Valencia, and some other of those " provinces that have no scarcity of " running water. In none of them you " would find a span of land, but what is " rendered fruitful by cultivation. There " you would fee luxuriant vines, and all " forts of fruit-trees adorn even the " steepest cliffs; the surface of hard " rocks, battered to dust with pick-" axes, receive all kinds of feeds; and " corn and legumes produced in places, " that one would think scarce acces-"fible to goats. Water, you know, is " the great parent of vegetation, and, " without it, both fun and land become " nearly useless for the purpose of agri-" culture : men culture: but water cannot be created "by men; and where we have none, "the land must lie just as it is. This or province of Aragon, as you may have " observed, abounds more in streams than New Castile; therefore you find it more fruitful. For the same reason " you will find Catalonia still better than Aragon, as the more you advance towards the fea, the running streams "become more numerous, and have a " competent declivity, which facilitates the branching of them out artifici-" ally, and fpreading them wherever it is thought proper. Conclude, if you chuse from such accidental circum-"Itances, that the Catalans are more "industrious than the Aragonians or that the Aragonians are more addicted to labour than the New Castilians; " but give me leave to fmile at your French way of drawing conclusions." You shall not, faid I, upon my word; as I have long been of opinion, that X 2 men men are much more alike throughout, than some people would make us believe. But thanking you for your digression, be so good as to let me hear a little more of the Aragonians.

I repeat it again, (continued the " Canon,) that the Aragonians have as " few vices, as any other people upon e earth. You may possibly fay, that mere absence of vice is but an indifferent kind of virtue? nor do I pretend to decorate it with hich a name. " But true and active virtue is not to be "expected from multitudes; nor is it "perhaps necessary that the gross of mankind should be virtuous in the exalted fense of the word, fince abdefice of vice is sufficient to the chief purposes of fociety. Let us not et launch however into this speculation of for the prefent. It is enough that the Aragonians are far from being a " worthless fet of men. I know them thoroughly, and can affure you that " the

the gross of them are free from degrading vices. Gluttony and ebriety e are words, to which they annex the most hateful ideas. They are not idle " when they can help it; they are not fuch liars as the low people throughout France are faid to be; they are not addicted to flealing, and have the reputation thoughout Spain of "making the best fervants: they are not guarrelfome, but live in peace and " affection with their neighbours. One of the proofs that they are not vicious, " is the hafte they make towards marriage; nor do they fwerve eafily from conjugal fidelity when they are once "bound in wedlock. Even our arrie-" ros (mule-drivers) who are incessantly "jurneying up to Madrid, keep true to their wives, and it is one of their am-5 bitions to throw into their laps a piece " of gold earned by a journey, the moment they re-enter their houses. L'thoroughly, & X can affure you that of the

" I will not fay (added the good man) that this character is applicable to all " the lower classes throughout the king-"dom, and that fome of our number-" less arrieros cannot get drunk, swear " wicked oaths, and have fomething to " fay to every wench, at the posadas. " Those of Valencia and Galicia in par-" ticular, are faid to be a wicked breed, " and as fuch we see them often repre-" fented upon our stage. But allowance " must always be made for notions of " this kind, that often have their fource " in prejudice, pique, and other causes, " not eafily traced back to their origin. "The Galicians and Valencians speak " dialects that found difagreeably to the ears of the Castilians, and of us, who " fpeak nearly Castilian: and I have " often observed, that difference in speech " is often sufficient to raise an antipathy " between the feveral parts of a nation, " and induce one to depreciate, censure, "and hate the other." well as we do th

This, interrupted I, is exactly the case with some of our petty nations of Italy. But, sir, have you many provinces in Spain, the dialects of which are not understood by the inhabitants of Castile and Aragon?

You will fee one (answered the Canon) within two days. They have a dialect in Catalonia, that you will certainly not understand. We know very well that at bottom it is Spanish; but the Catalans mask it so much by pronunciation, and have besides inter-Harded it fo copiously with Italian, "French, Gascoon, Provencial, and even Byscayan words, that it proves quite as difficult for us to learn, as any other language of Europe. The of dialect of Valencia borders much upon " the Catalonian, but is not fo hard for " us to comprehend. The Galician we look likewise upon as a strange " Speech; yet we comprehend it near as well as we do the Portuguese. In short, My logmi ". X 4 the more we go from New Castilenthe, in more difference we find in our dia"lects, as you will easily conceive. But the most difficult for us to learn is the Baseunze, otherwise called Landenin guage, which extends from the fown of Irim to that of Tasalla on one "fide, and that of Santander on the "

"other."

your geography, that I must beg of your to tell me where those three towns are stuated, as I scarcely ever heard of their mames before.

No wonder (replied the Canony) as less none of them is very confiderable.

But Irum lies on a river called Beivila by the Byfeayans, and Bidaffia by the French. Irum is about half a league which that is, an illet in that river, not half a mile in circumference, which has been pretty famous ever fince the "important still by our honest Don Luis de Haro, and to your cunning Gardinal Mazarine, and of The small town of Tafalla lies in the kingdom of Navarre, six leagues that the south from its capital, called tw Pampeluna: and Santandén is a small stafeasport town, placed at the extression of Asterias.

Milit Irum, Tafalla, and Santander form to a lkind of triangle, of which Santander is the acutest point. Within that triangle are comprised the principality of Biscay, the small province of Guipuscoa, the best part of Nationarre, its capital not excepted, and a narrow district called Alova. No dialect of the Spanish language is significant than our monarchy) called Bascuenze, as I said, and or Lengua Bascongada.

ol heen protty famous ever fince the igust In Bileay, and fome parts of Nathourre, I have refided above a twelvemonth, and there have attempted to delearn that tongue; but to very little purpose, as it is of a nature quite different from the Latin, Spanish, and French ; nay, if our learned know "what they fay, quite different from Many other language that ever was fa-"miliar to the Europeans. While signing But I fee, that we are quitting our "first subject very fast (faid the Carron) and are going to launch into another unot eafily to be exhaufted. Let us " fave it for to-morrow, as we are foon going to alight. To-morrow we will "talk of the Bifcayans, and of their Solanguage, manners, and country. Let " us conclude this day's talk with the " common faying, that the Devil is not "fo black as he is painted, nor the Spaniards fo idle and wicked as "Frenchmen are pleased to affirm," alismor or

(R)

more

Such was the fubstance of our long chit-chat this afternoon, and fuch is the opinion that my new acquaintance has of the inhabitants of Spain in general, and of the Aragonians in particular. But what he has here faid of those that live in the inner parts of this kingdom, a man needs be no conjurer to know, that it may likewife justly be faid of all people that live in the inner parts of any large country whatfoever. It is only in great and populous towns, that the profligate can eafily affociate to keep each other in countenance, and hide their wickedness behind that of others: whereas in small places, few dare to be vicious, partly for want of company, and partly because wickedness is of little use, and soon detected among the few. The writers of travels are therefore very blameable, who fall indistinctly upon any large nation, and brand the whole mass of its individuals with those vices, which they have happened to remark more more frequent amongst the inhabitants of a populous metropolis. The peeviff fatyrift, who paints any nation as perfeetly corrupted, and the bucolic rhymer, who describes another as perfectly innocent, depart equally from truth, and, as far as in them lies, they both deceive their reader; for which they ought to be equally cenfured; yet not with any der gree of feverity, as in fact no body is the dupe of their exaggerated pictures and descriptions, as every reader has been early taught to make due allowance for poetical malignity, and poetical goodnature. But that man does not come, under this predicament, who trufting to the distance of places, and the difficulty of detection, represents nations in falle. colours, gives a bad character to this, and a worse to that; thus endeavouring to raise and maintain prejudices and anie, mosities in one part of mankine against, another. Such a man ought not only to be severely censured and detested, but driven driven amongst canibals and favages, as a common enemy to the great common wealth of mankind. To avoid being ranked in the class of such infamous defamers, let no body write any thing of his travels when in the paroxysm of that spleen, that will naturally besiege a mind amidst the numerous and unavoidable inconveniencies of a long journey. Writing only when in good humour, I am pretty consident that we shall find all men pretty nearly the same in every country, and that no travel-writer shall bestow upon millions the invectives that are scarcely deserved by a few thousands.

of this day. We dined at the venta de Santa Lucia, three leagues distant from this village of Bujalaroz, and fituated in the midst of a small desart. The ventero told me, that he pays annually three than the pays annually three three driven

Hundred * pefos duros for the renting of that wretched house, which can scarce have cost such a sum in building. thing is proportionably fo dear throughout Spain, as the rent of ventas and poladas. I wonder that the ventero of Santa Lucia does not fleece every traveller who happens to alight at his door, to repay himself a fum so enormous. But the incessant passage of large gangs of muleteers, furnishes him with fufficient means of satisfying his landlord, and maintaining himself and family over and above: and the habit of being just to those fellows, who certainly would not put up with any imposition of his, renders him indistinctly honest with every body else, that comes under his roof. He gave the Canon and me a good fowl, a couple of partridges, a fallad, and a bit of cheefe, befides bread and wine: yet my share of the reckoning did not amount to quite four reals. Had he charged us thrice as much, we should not have thought him immoderate; and I told him fo as we shook hands at parting. I know you would not, answered the man : but yo no quiero ir al infierno por ustedes, " I will not go " to hell for the Sake of your worships." Tis pity, thought I, that virtue is fo miferably clad, and fo wretchedly lodged.

A pelo duro is worth twenty reals; that is, little less than five shillings sterling.

A cloud of women furrounded us as we alighted here, all hastily knitting stockings, which they offered to fell us for only nine reals a pair, though their worsted is very fine and very thinly spun.

every hody elfer that care under his roof - He gave the Canon and me a good towl a rougle of parridges, a follad,

The END of the THIRD VOLUME.

bas

bus the of election behild broad and gricostan eds de execut you soy their that I show another the contraction that "Well charged us thrice as march, me w w. Linguist not have titruly whim, improdestoom of each, mill blot I been appled bluow for mend I beginnen troit and the enterety the attent but seem ment Standishman to the fire from the line of the combined from the few of season was freely 5 FE 66 day in the civil and to weetchedly looking. to A stoud of women furounded using we salighted here, out hadily knowing Reckings, which they offered to fell us for only nine reals a vair, though their worlked is very fine and very thinly thun.

Acres Carrier Store to and a Land and the state of the

the second of th

